a cry in the night

The Infants' Ward is quiet — time for a cup of tea, perhaps. The kettle is on, your eyes are drooping but your ears are wide awake — was that a cry from the end of the ward?

You hurry along — what can be wrong? A dirty nappy? A puncturing pin? A sudden desire for attention? Of one thing you can be sure — it isn't hunger, for baby is on Cow & Gate and babies on this wonderful food sleep all the night through.

Early to sleep and wake up late
Means Baby's contented on Cow & Gate.

A LITTLE BOOK THAT HELPS

YOUR WORK

AMONGST MOTHERS

So many inexperienced mothers appreciate practical help and guidance, that each year more and more nurses are distributing Steedman's famous "Hints to Mothers" booklet which has proved so invaluable to three generations.

Packed from cover to cover with useful information and arranged alphabetically for easy reference, it gives advice on the treatment of all baby ailments and tells what to do while awaiting the doctor in cases of accident or serious illness.

Quite small, but really good — like Steedman's Powders themselves; which as you know are absolutely safe and gentle for little systems, ensuring healthy regularity and keeping the blood stream clean and cool.

Every nurse knows the danger to babies of constipation—knows, too, that Steedman's Powders are made especially for little ones and have been relied upon and trusted for over a hundred years.

Why not let us send you a small supply of the "Hints to Mothers" booklets, if you can pass them on to those mothers who need them? They are, of course, quite free and post free.

For the patient with Hæmorrhoids

RELIEF FROM PAIN AND APPREHENSION....

GERMOLOIDS are emollient. They soften the bowel contents and lubricate the mucous membrane of the rectal wall. Thus they permit easy evacuation with the removal of pressure from tender hæmorrhoidal swellings. This alleviation of the condition frees the patient from irritation or pain and from the anxiety and depression associated therewith. Where the veins have become inflamed it will be found that GERMOLOIDS assist healing by spreading a protective film over the affected surfaces. GERMOLOIDS can be easily inserted, are readily retained. Nothing could be cleaner in use.

The formula of GERMOLOIDS is as follows:—
Zinci Oxidum 8.00% Ethylis Salicylas 2.85%
Resorcinol 2.14% Bismuthi Subchloridum 5.71%
Rubrum Scarlatinum 0.007% Ceresina
11.11% Cetaceum 8.88% Ol.
Theobromatis ad 100%

GERMOLOIDS are obtainable at all chemists, but a FREE TRIAL BOX will gladly be sent to all members of the NURSING PROFESSION.

JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING

NURSING TIMES

Macmillan and Company, Limited, London — Saturday, May 17, 1952

EDITOR: MISS M. L. WENGER, S.R.N., S.C.M., DIPLOMA IN NURSING, UNIVERSITY OF LONDON

What Should be Taught?

A challenge is always good, and as a result of a joint letter by a doctor and a surgeon of Worcester in The Lancet of April 5, many nurses and others interested will have been asking themselves yet again 'What should the nurse be taught?' The authors' first concern would seem, however, to have been with the urgent problem of the shortage of hospital staff as they advocate that girls should on leaving school be offered 'nursing employment'. The staffing problem should be irrelevant to a discussion on the education and professional preparation of nurses except in the long term view of the best preparation for their particular work. Unfortunately, it will remain immediately relevant in this country so long as boards, management committees, matrons and medical staff can find no solution to their staffing problem without employing girls in their teens on the assumption that after such employment they will wish to remain as student nurses.

Commenting on the nurses' training and what they describe as the 'ridiculous curriculum' the authors say the course should be drastically pruned—at least a year being cut out—yet finally conclude that the nurse should have 'an indefinable quality of personality which makes her more than a technician. She should be able to make the patient feel that she is sharing the burden of his illness while remaining detached from it. Attention to this nurse-patient relationship is a first call on the education of nurses; the fact that those responsible for nurses' training have turned themselves into crammers of facts to be memorised shows how far they are removed from the realities.'

Three main points are touched on in this statement. The nurse must have technical skill—and a skill needs understanding if it is to be really skilful—particularly when it is part of a service to human beings in their infinite variety. The technician needs teaching and practice—or 'training'—a term slowly giving place in our nursing schools to 'education' or 'preparation.'

Secondly, are those responsible for the nurse's training merely crammers of facts? In this country the major part of her three years is spent by the student nurse working in the wards under, we hope, trained nurses and sisters. Do they cram facts—or do they rather suggest an attitude and demonstrate an approach while carrying out their ordinary work? The complaint is, usually, that there is too little recognised teaching in the wards; a criticism, which many hospitals have answered by providing clinical classes by the doctor or ward sister concerned, by group teaching in the ward, by full reports and discussions being held when day and night staff exchange, and by the appointment, in a few instances, of a clinical tutor.

Perhaps The Lancet correspondents were referring only to the tutor's responsibility for the nurse's training—she is responsible for seeing it is adequately arranged and that the theoretical side is given and understood. No tutor would claim to have trained a nurse, and, alas, few tutors are given the opportunity or the facilities to ensure that the student nurse is given primarily an educational course, rather than a 'learning by doing' course.

At every conference on a subject of topical importance in health or sickness a speaker will urge that the subject should be added to the student nurses' curriculum. The next speaker will urge that something be deleted from the syllabus. Is it not rather a question of education, of basic attitudes, of enabling and guiding the potential nurse to understand the individual as a part of a particular society? Should we not let the facts keep their proper level, the technical work be looked on as a skill to be acquired, and remind ourselves that a professional person requires an education as wide and deep as possible, but always directed to a clear aim?

Finally, who can give or teach 'that indefinable quality of personality' which makes the nurse as distinct from a technician? Only the nurse herself can acquire this. Will she develop it if from the age of 15 she is employed amongst the sick and in the peculiar world of hospital—separate from the community and with nothing of experience to help her in understanding the many people she will meet?

Returning to the problem of employment there is, obviously, a need for staff for both types of work—for the simple bedside care and for the intelligent competence to cope with modern medical treatments—while both groups require that personality which cannot be taught but can be nurtured. Each requires a very different preparation but this is not helped by the unsympathetic approach of the two Lancet correspondents. Fortunately, there has now been published *Hospital Nursing Auxiliaries—Notes on a Background

A Persian nurse shows her friend, also from Persia, the certificate she received after completing her training at the Birmingham General Hospital.

[Birmingham Gazette and Despatch Limited]

* Tavistock Publications Ltd., 2, Beaumont Street, London, W.1, price 2s. 9d. (This will be reviewed more fully later.)

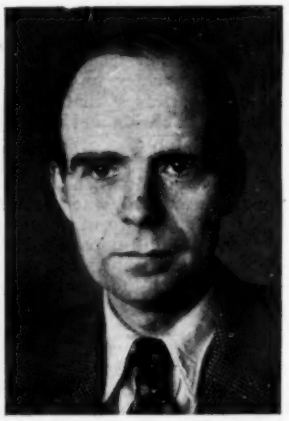
Survey and Job Analysis—by A. T. M. Wilson, M.D., B.Sc., which gives an informed and objective study of the whole position of different staff in hospitals in relation to each other and to the total care required by the patient. This should do much to clarify the problem so that those who criticise and those who are responsible for future planning and staffing can understand more fully the deep implications. We have already had, in this country, all manner of schemes to attract the 15-year-old girl yet there is still a shortage of nurses and a high wastage rate. Should we not now try the opposite—a scheme to appeal to the older more mature woman—who has much to give because of her wider background, not narrowed by the confines of a hospital as soon as school is left behind?

Topical Notes

World Health Assembly

THE FIFTH ANNUAL SESSION in Geneva of the World Health Assembly is being held during three weeks from May 5. Among the activities of WHO, during the year 1951, the importance of the many Fellowships awarded is stressed, nursing and other branches of the health services being included in the list of awards made. In its fight against tuberculosis WHO has a big programme in hand, particularly as regards mass BCG vaccination (with the co-operation of UNICEF) and research. Sponsored by WHO, many fellows, including doctors and nurses and visitors from some 20 countries, have visited the Tuberculosis Research Office at Copenhagen. British delegates and advisers to the Assembly this year include Sir John Charles, Chief Medical Officer, Ministry of Health, Sir Andrew Davidson, Chief Medical Officer, Department of Health for Scotland, other officials of the Ministry of Health and the Colonial Office, and Dr. M. T. Morgan of the Ministry of Transport. Delegations from most of the 79 member states are expected to attend the Assembly and in addition there will be technical discussions on The Economic Value of Preventive Medicine and Methods of Health Protection for Local Areas.

NEW MINISTER OF HEALTH



Mr. I. N. Macleod, Conservative M.P. for West Enfield, became Minister of Health last week, on the resignation of Mr. Harry Crookshank, who was appointed Lord Privy Seal. This is Mr. Macleod's first Government office which he takes up at the age of 38 after a comparatively brief political career. In accordance with former arrangements Mr. Macleod will not be a member of the Cabinet.

Home Help in Many Countries

THE FIRST INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE of The Home Help Service was held in London last week, under the auspices of the National Association of Home Help Organisers. Delegates from 11 countries were welcomed at the opening session by Miss Pat Hornsby-Smith, Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Health. The first day was devoted to various aspects of the service in this country, when speakers prominent in the medical, nursing and social services related home help to domiciliary care of the sick and aged. During the other two days, addresses were given by delegates from European countries and from Australia and America. Speakers included Miss Sigrid Larsson, a public health nurse from Finland. The final address was given by Dr. J. A. Scott, O.B.E., M.D., D.P.H., Chief Medical Officer of Health, London County Council, who said that this was a fundamental service which had come to stay, and which had a real contribution to make in terms of human happiness and efficiency. It was obvious from the many speakers that the problems of home help for the sick and infirm are common to all countries, and that a great effort was being made to solve these; there were of course many local and national variations in the way in which the problem was being tackled. In some countries, notably Sweden, the service is well established, it enjoys high social prestige, and entails an extensive training. We in this country have much to learn from those where the service is already more highly developed, and where more money is spent on the home help training. The Organisers who gathered in London last week were determined that high standards must be established, and were agreed that some form of training for this important work was a prerequisite for an efficient service.

The Immortal Tapestry

NURSES OF NORTHERN IRELAND are producing this week a pageant entitled The Immortal Tapestry, devised by Miss M. E. Grey, M.B.E., secretary to the Northern Ireland Committee of the Royal College of Nursing. The proceeds of the pageant which is being presented on May 14, 15 and 16, in the Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, will be given to the Northern Ireland Educational Fund Appeal. The Duchess of Gloucester will receive purses of the monies raised at this and many other functions in the Throne Room of Government House, Hillsborough, on May 22. Three hundred nurses, men and women, are taking part in the pageant and their colleagues will wish them every success in their presentation of the spirit of nursing through the years.

For Refugees

THE UNITED NATIONS High Commissioner for Refugees, Dr. Van Heuven Goedhart, recently visited London to seek help for the 'hard core' of refugees. Dr. Goedhart, a former editor of newspapers and the resistance movement paper in Holland and Minister of Justice to the Netherlands Government in exile at the end of the war, led the Netherlands delegation to the United Nations General Assembly in 1950. It was at this session that the office of High Commissioner was formed, and Dr. Goedhart elected. His present mandate does not cover refugees who are still within the country of their own ethnic origin, so that those in Korea, Pakistan, the Arabic countries and Germany do not come within his purview, but this leaves some 1½ million in various countries, of whom approximately 70,000 are living in camps in Austria. By now the possibilities of resettlement overseas are practically exhausted; the hard core left consists mainly of those whom, on economic grounds, no country is particularly anxious to receive—the old, the disabled, the sick or the handicapped—or families containing such persons. The aim, therefore is to settle such refugees in the countries where they are now—for instance, to set them up in small businesses by means of financial loans. And this project was the principal object of Dr. Goedhart's visit; he hoped to obtain from the British Government a contribution to the funds which already exist for this purpose, but which are quite inadequate. He was also anxious to interest public opinion over here in the plight of these refugees. He paid high tribute to the work of the voluntary organisations—both religious and lay bodies—and said that without their activities the plight of these unfortunate people would have been infinitely worse.

Central Health Services Council—

THE THIRD REPORT of the Central Health Services Council, constituted under the National Health Service Act, 1946, has just been issued covering the year 1951.* The report which is presented in three parts is prefaced by a statement by Mr. Harry Crookshank, lately Minister of Health. Part I covers the proceedings of the Council, and includes some subjects of general interest. Part II presents the Final Report of the Oral Hygienists Sub-committee of the Standing Dental Advisory Committee. Reports on the activities of the various Standing Advisory Committees are incorporated in Part III. As the Minister points out in his preface, all work of the Council and its committees during the past year, has been undertaken against a background of strict economy. A subject of much deliberation has been the closer co-operation between the three main branches of the health service—the hospital, local authority and general practitioner services. Another subject has been the selection of maternity cases for admission to hospital. Of interest also is the setting up of a committee "to review the Scottish Report on 'The Reception and Welfare of In-patients in Hospitals,' and to submit a report on similar lines." The Council considered that it would be useful if the Minister sent such a document to hospital authorities in England and Wales, asking them to review the practice in the light of its recommendations. This committee includes Miss N. B. Deane, M.B.E., S.R.N., S.C.M. and Miss K. G. Douglas, S.R.N., S.C.M.

—and Advisory Committees

THE STANDING MEDICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE has given advice on a variety of medical matters. It has continued its association with the Standing Nursing Advisory Committee on the control of infection in hospitals and has been in consultation with the latter committee among other matters on the provision of accommodation for the sister-in-charge of a ward or department. The Standing Pharmaceutical Advisory Committee has made recommendations on the prescribing of disinfectants and on the definition of drugs. The Committee was also asked by the Minister to review the arrangements for the provision of pharmaceutical services in hospitals and to advise him on the most efficient and economical organisation of these services. The Standing Dental Advisory Committee was consulted on the provisions in the proposed Dentists Bill which related to ancillary dental workers, and reviewed the dental services, the dental manpower position and the provision of dental services in hospitals. The Committee have also endorsed the report of the Oral Hygienists Sub-committee, which makes certain recommendations for using oral hygienists in the public dental service, and which forms Part II of the Council's report. The Standing Nursing Advisory Committee reports on the issue of memoranda on nursing techniques, on the protection of nurses from tuberculosis and upon selection of student nurses. The Committee also gave further consideration to the provision of accommodation for the sister-in-charge of a ward or department, and to the division of general wards into cubicles. In addition the Committee has under consideration the prevention of bedsores in hospitals. The Standing Mental Health Advisory Committee makes some interesting suggestions on preventive psychiatry and on the safeguarding of the mental health of children. Consideration was given by the Committee to the report on the success of 'day hospitals' in Canada and the United States. The Standing Tuberculosis Advisory Committee considered the revision of the regulations on the notification of the disease. The Standing Cancer and Radiotherapy Advisory Committee reviewed recent research on the relationship between smoking and cancer of the lung, the development of regional cancer services and various matters of a technical nature. Included was the following advice to the Minister: that there should be periodic inspection of radium held in hospitals and that small quantities held without adequate radiotherapy and physicist services should be withdrawn to a national pool.

Pathology and Surgical Treatment of Pulmonary Tuberculosis*

by DONALD McILVEEN, M.B., Ch.B., Assistant Chest Physician, Regional Thoracic Unit, Hill Top Hospital, Bromsgrove.

THE surgical treatment of tuberculosis is often carried out in sanatoria which employ all methods of treatment, but thoracic surgical units in general hospitals treat many of these patients. Their stay in such a unit is relatively short, involving only a part of their whole treatment. This short article attempts to show how thoracic surgical treatment is integrated into the whole scheme which, because it is carried out in special hospitals, tends to be something of a closed book to the nurse in a general hospital.

Pathology

The tubercle bacillus reaches the lung by being inhaled into an alveolus or bronchiole where it produces a specific reaction in the tissues, which leads to the formation of a tubercle. It is the development or recession of this lesion which determines whether a person will suffer from active pulmonary tuberculosis or not.

The Primary Complex

At the first invasion of the lung by the tubercle bacillus, the reaction is usually not very great but there is much activity in the lymph glands which drain the area of attack and they become swollen and inflamed by the formation of tubercles in them. It is this association of lymph gland disease or adenopathy which differentiates the primary attack from any subsequent one and the lung and gland lesions together constitute the primary complex. Depending upon the patient's resistance, the disease may progress or retrogress. If the latter, there may be complete resolution and no evidence remains that the lung has ever been attacked or, having been beaten up to a point, the body's resistance then overcomes the attack and the lesion is calcified. If, however, the resistance is poor there is a much more unhappy sequence.

First is the formation of a tubercle which, when examined through a microscope, consists of a central zone of dead or necrotic tissue surrounded by a zone of epitheloid cells with which are giant cells, while in the outermost zone are lymphocytes and fibroblasts. As the organisms extend their attack so the central necrotic zone becomes larger and, at first, caseous. This caseation is typical of tuberculosis. Following upon this it liquefies and may then be discharged into the bronchus from which the alveoli arose. Thus the bronchus becomes connected with a tuberculous cavity which, at this stage, is called the primary cavity and the patient is suffering from phthisis. (Fig. 2.) If this liquid debris from the cavity is inspired into other segments of the lung a tuberculous broncho-pneumonia may follow. Instead of eroding into a bronchus the tubercle may discharge into a blood vessel, giving rise to a tuberculous bacillaemia (miliary tuberculosis, so called because the lesions look like a millet seed). The diseased glands behave in the same way.

It is only for patients who are thus attacked that treatment is necessary in the primary phase and their numbers are relatively small. Usually this attack takes place in childhood and most people survive the disease without having symptoms. But when it occurs during puberty or early adult life especially, it tends to be progressive and the phthisis thus acquired has to be treated in the same way as phthisis developing from the post-primary attack.

Post-primary Attack

Even though the patient has escaped from phthisis due to the primary attack, another invasion or awakened activity of the bacillus may give rise to active disease. The pathological process is exactly the same in that there is tubercle formation in the lung but it differs from the primary complex since there is no marked involvement of lymph glands. Once the lesion has formed, the natural history of the disease varies according to the response of the tissues which differ from individual to individual, depending upon the amount of fibrous tissue laid down. Thus in one patient a cavity is formed without much fibrous tissue and there is only a thin wall. If conditions are made ideal such a cavity may close spontaneously or can be affected by relaxation treatment and so close. If, however, there is also tuberculous disease in the bronchus this may have a valve-like action so that air can enter the cavity but not readily escape. In the case of a thin walled cavity, it will tend to go on expanding, becoming quite spherical. Such a cavity is called a tension cavity and is dangerous for, by continued expansion, it may rupture into the pleural cavity, giving rise to a spontaneous pneumothorax and eventually a tuberculous empyema.

When the lung tissue reacts by laying down much fibrous tissue it shows that resistance to the disease is high and that the patient is trying to heal himself, though this very fibrosis may tend to keep the cavity open and, at the same time, defeat any effort made at treatment by relaxation. As a result of this fibrosis a whole lobe of the lung may gradually contract into a small hard mass containing a honeycomb of small cavities which will never close.

Sometimes the fibrosis may completely surround the necrotic zone in such a way that the contents are never discharged into a bronchus. This lesion is called a tuberculoma and it is also formed in the course of routine treatment when the original cavity becomes sealed off with granulations and, instead of a cavity containing air, one containing inspissated pus remains.

The foregoing are the ways in which the disease affects the lungs themselves. In passing, mention was made of tuberculous empyema following on the rupture of a tuberculous cavity into the pleural space, but this complication may occur merely by extension of the disease peripherally so that the visceral layer of the pleura is attacked. This leads to an outpouring of fluid containing many leucocytes by the pleura. In such an event, the empyema is purely tuberculous, but in those empyemata formed as a result of the rupture of a cavity into the pleural space, pyogenic organisms are able to gain entry, giving a mixed infection.

General Treatment

Having mentioned the various types of lesion caused in the lung, it is obvious that a patient may have any number of these at the same time so that treatment becomes complicated; therefore it is almost impossible to be dogmatic about the method of treating any patient, although why any particular surgical treatment is used, if at all, can be more readily appreciated.

The treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis, like that of tuberculosis in any part of the body, consists, basically, in putting the patient in the best possible condition for natural processes to heal the lesion, together with any specific measures, local or general, which may help. In most cases, therefore, the patient is put to bed to give him physical and mental rest, by removing any worries he may have about family, livelihood, etc., and by making the environment as pleasant as possible. In addition, the diet should be rich in protein and fats and made appetising since loss of appetite is often a major symptom.

By these means alone many patients are cured. In others, drugs which have a specific effect in the growth of the tubercle bacillus are used; these include streptomycin, which is mostly given parenterally (and less commonly by inhalation) and para-aminosalicylic acid (P.A.S.) and Thiosemocarbazone which we give by mouth. A third group are those who have to have some local treatment to the lung itself. This may be either some form of collapse therapy which aims at giving rest to the lung, or actual extirpation of the diseased tissue. It is for these last patients that thoracic surgery plays a great part, and while recognising its importance, for without it many patients could not be treated, the general measures cannot be disregarded, since, though the surgeon may deal adequately with one part of the lungs, all too rarely does the tubercle bacillus so limit its attack. When a decision as to what type of surgery should be used is to be made, the complete history since the onset of the illness must be carefully reviewed and this sometimes leads to controversy as to which is the best method of treatment.

Major Surgery

Certain types of lesion present little difficulty, so that for lower and dorsal lobes which have not responded to routine 'medical' treatment, lobectomy would be the surgical method. Lobectomy is carried out by opening the chest widely and dissecting out the artery bronchus and vein supplying the lobe: they are then secured, divided and appropriately closed by suture and ligature.

While extirpation of diseased tissue may be an ideal at which to aim, the tubercle bacillus does not usually limit its attack to one small area of the lungs, and often the patient may have a cavitating lesion in one upper lobe, say the left, with scattered exudative disease in the upper and middle lobes of the right lung and, although this latter is controlled, excision of the left upper lobe alone is not likely to cure the patient. In such a situation the treatment of choice would be a left upper thoracoplasty.

By this method the patient is assisted in healing the lesion in the left upper lobe and at the same time he is not subjected to the risks which are inherent in resection operations. These risks are atelectasis (collapse) of the remaining lobe, bronchial fistula, and empyema. In addition the mortality from the operation itself is not so great. It is obvious, however, that this operation, which by removal of the ribs allows the chest wall to fall in, thus relaxing the underlying lung, can have no effect on lesions which are already contracted down to their minimum size, like the tuberculomata, or which, by reason of excessive fibrosis, cannot contract any more and these are dealt with by resection. In almost every patient who has the resection of lobe or lung a thoracoplasty is carried out as part of the resection operation about a month after on the same side, in order to prevent over-expansion of the remaining lung tissue with the risk of opening up quiescent foci.

For this last reason it might be called prophylactic, to distinguish it from therapeutic thoracoplasty, carried out without previous resection. The latter also is different in that, more often than not, it is carried out in stages with intervals of about two weeks between them, the number of stages depending on the total number of ribs to be removed. Thus in a seven-rib thoracoplasty it may be done in two stages of three ribs and four ribs or three stages of two ribs, two ribs and three ribs. And one final major difference is that whereas in the therapeutic thoracoplasty, apicolysis (freeing of the apex of the pleura) is an important part of the operation, it is unnecessary in the prophylactic type.

The necessity for post-lobectomy thoracoplasty has led to a compromise in some cases, whereby the thoracoplasty is done first and the patient watched for a suitable length of time. If at the end of this time the disease is still active, the diseased tissue is then removed. Such a course cannot be followed in disease of the lower lobe since thoracoplasty is essentially an operation on the upper ribs, nor is thoracoplasty usually carried out after resection of a lower lobe. In this latter case, the size of the hemithorax is reduced by evulsion of the phrenic nerve which causes paralysis and elevation of the diaphragm on that side.

Decortication and Pleuro-pneumonectomy

When the pleura is widely involved in the tuberculous process, the problem of empyema arises. Most of these are associated with severe lung disease, having been caused either by direct extension or from rupture of a cavity into the pleural space. When this is so and surgical treatment is considered possible, because of a healthy contralateral lung, the empyema sac and the lung are removed in toto by the operation of pleuro-pneumonectomy. In those patients where the lung disease is minimal, decortication of the lung is carried out, the diseased pleura being removed from both the lung and the chest wall. By this means both the diseased tissue is removed and the lung is allowed to re-expand and so obliterate the empyema cavity. In another group the chest is aspirated and a thoracoplasty carried out so that both layers of the pleura are approximated. These patients would be those in whom the underlying pulmonary disease was extensive and disease on the opposite lung excluded pleuro-pneumonectomy.

Even this brief outline shows how impossible it is to say that any particular type of lesion in pulmonary tuberculosis must be treated in any one way. The X-ray photographs illustrate the various operative procedures described.

Minor Surgery

Before major surgery is contemplated there are two minor operations which may help in the 'medical' treatment of a patient and both are used in collapse therapy.

Phrenic crush is not strictly a thoracic operation since it consists of crushing the phrenic nerve as it courses down the neck into the chest to supply the diaphragm. The result is a temporary paralysis of the diaphragm, lasting usually from about three to six months, which helps to relax the lung on the affected side and decrease respiratory movements.

Thoracoscopy and Adhesion Section

This manoeuvre allows the inside of the pleural cavity to be viewed after the induction of an artificial pneumothorax. By means of a telescope inserted through a cannula it is possible to confirm the presence of suspected adhesions between the visceral and parietal pleura and then to assess whether they are divisible. This is important since no artificial pneumothorax should be maintained in the presence of adhesions which are likely to tear out and give rise, following rupture of the lung, to an empyema. If the adhesions are considered divisible the division is carried out by a cautery inserted through a second cannula. The kind of adhesion which is divisible is the thin string-like or flat curtain, whereas the indivisible ones are those where the lung and chest wall are fixed or where the adhesion is short and has its parietal margin over the large vessels in the apex and mediastinum.

Conclusion

Somewhat briefly we have seen how the tubercle bacillus attacks the lungs and how the body's protective mechanism works to defend them. In many instances this is sufficient, but the great advances in thoracic surgery have provided a powerful weapon with which to help those whose defences are poor. Nevertheless, it is only an additional weapon, for the general routine treatment remains a most important factor and must be carried out intensively both before the surgical attack and for some time afterwards.

'NURSING TIMES' SILVER JUBILEE ESSAY COMPETITION

THE NURSING SERVICES

A PLAN FOR 1962

THIS essay was highly commended in our competition. Miss Lilian M. Darnell, S.R.N., S.C.M., R.F.N., Sister Tutor Certificate, Deputy Secretary, Nursing Recruitment Centre, King Edward's Hospital Fund for London (since 1946), trained at Battersea General Hospital and Collins Memorial Maternity Hospital, Sherwood, Nottingham. She has held posts as theatre staff nurse, staff midwife, sister of a diagnostic X-ray department, a tutor at the Westminster Hospital, and of a group preliminary training school.

THE middle of the twentieth century, in this country at least, might well be called the age of plans. Plans are essential, especially when they are long-term and deal with matters affecting human life. They can succeed only if they are broad and capable of modification in the light of future circumstances. In planning a nursing service for 1962, therefore, consideration must be given to present trends and an attempt must be made to see where they are leading. Schemes must then be drawn up in broad outline, and must be gradually introduced. The plans themselves must be kept under constant revision during the intervening years.

Certain pointers to the future are clear; some of them influence the nursing service already. Population figures, for example, are significant. Couples married in the mid-Victorian era had families averaging between 5.5 and 6 children, whereas the comparable figure for those married between 1925 and 1929 was only 2.2. The total number of people in the working age-group (15 to 65) is not likely to change appreciably by 1962, but the number of women in it will fall by some 50,000. In the smaller group between 18 and 30, from which the majority of student nurses are drawn, the decline will be in the region of 500,000. The effect of the rise in the birth-rate which occurred during the 1940's will not begin to be felt, at least as far as nursing is concerned, before 1960; until then, figures will continue to be influenced by the decrease of the preceding years. The expectation of life has risen in the last eighty years from about 43 to about 65 years. This means that the proportion of old people in the total population will continue to rise. In 1871 it was 4.8 per cent., by 1948 it was 10.4 per cent. and in 1977 it will be about 16 per cent.

During the next decade, it is estimated that the number of children at school will rise by roughly a million. The effect on nursing will be direct in that the maternity and child welfare and school health services will have to expand, and indirect in that there will be greater competition from the teaching profession for young people suitable for training.

Numerically, then, the nursing service cannot continue to grow at its present rate, and the field from which new nurses can be drawn will shrink.

Womanpower and Economy

Manpower (and, of course, womanpower) problems cannot be dissociated from economic problems and those of finance. Cuts and economies are the order of the day, in the health service as elsewhere. Although nursing is only a part of the service, it is a major part, and nurses will have to give that little more which is required of everyone. Some of the necessary economies can be effected by ensuring that nurses do not waste their time on work which could equally well be done by other people, and here the report of the job analysis recently carried out by the Nuffield Provincial Hospitals Trust may give valuable guidance. Looking further ahead than just the next ten years, the same Trust's investigations into hospital planning and function will have an important bearing not only upon nursing but also upon all branches of hospital work.

While the nation will not be able to afford great new schemes of capital expenditure in the immediate future, the development of new towns will provide opportunities for research and experiment, and much can be learned which will be of inestimable value when money is more freely available.

Forecasting Health

It is more difficult to forecast the health needs of the community in ten years' time. Some indication has already been given of probable developments in that there will be more children and more old people requiring care. Mothers are being encouraged to have their babies at home, with the result that more domiciliary midwives will be needed, but fewer in hospitals. The health of the next generation of babies will reflect the improvement in the health of the older school children of 1952, and the teaching in mothercraft which so many girls now receive will have its effect on their children.

With regard to the infectious diseases, vaccination and inoculation have almost eradicated smallpox and diphtheria, and chemotherapy and the antibiotic drugs have controlled many of the others. Experiments now being carried out may, in the next ten years, give actual protection against measles, whooping cough and anterior poliomyelitis.

In all fields of medicine and surgery, recent advances have made treatment possible where a few years ago the outlook was hopeless, and there is no reason to suppose that progress will be any less rapid in future. The measure of tuberculosis has been taken, and although much work still remains to be done, it may well be that in 1962 the majority of sanatorium beds will be closed, not for lack of staff but for lack of patients. While accidents can never be entirely eliminated, better understanding of the problems of fatigue has done, and will continue to do, much to reduce their incidence. Fuller knowledge of the risks of certain industrial processes will hasten the control of occupational diseases.

It seems, therefore, that the emphasis in health work will fall increasingly on prevention rather than cure, and that the nurses of the future, whether they are employed within or outside the hospital service, will have to be health teachers.

Recruitment—Demand and Supply

Although the General Nursing Council Report for the period from November 1949 to March 1951 shows that nearly 28,000 names were added to the Index of Student Nurses during that time, and that 2,200 more assistant nurses began training, the recruitment of sufficient nurses to meet the demands of 1952 is difficult. In one respect, perhaps, the peak of demand has almost been reached; most nurses now work a 96-hour fortnight, and the majority of training schools arrange for students to be away from the wards for definite study periods. On the other hand, this country has the highest ratio of staffed hospital beds to total population of any in the world, and still more are needed. The growth of preventive services may reduce the pressure on hospitals so that fewer nurses are needed in them, but the total demand of all branches of nursing is unlikely to fall.

Future staffing of the nursing service depends on the recruitment and selection of suitable candidates and the provision of a training course which will appeal to them and hold their interest. The work done by qualified nurses, too, must be such as will satisfy and yet not overtax them, so that wastage is reduced to a minimum.

The best recruiting agents are those who have themselves found satisfaction in nursing. All forms of propaganda should emphasise the value of nursing to the community and the happiness which it brings, rather than the material rewards. Opportunities must be made more widely available for parties of school girls and their parents and teachers to visit hospitals and health centres so that they gain first-hand information about the kind of work which nurses do and the conditions in which they do it. Such visits admittedly take time to arrange and carry out, but they should be regarded as valuable methods of recruitment and as part of a general educational programme.

Salaries and Training Grants

On the material side, salaries for trained nurses must bear a definite relationship to the cost of living and must recognise the fact that nurses have the same responsibilities to their families as any other groups of workers. The question of training allowances is rather different. A large proportion of student nurses are young, and the money which they receive during training should be comparable to the grants for further education made to entrants to other professions, especially to those in which practical work forms an essential part of the course. Generous dependents' allowances should be given to all who need them. Living conditions are now reasonably good in the majority of cases. Where they are not, they must be improved, always bearing in mind that the provision of luxurious nurses' quarters does not of itself solve recruitment problems. The key-note of publicity must be the dissemination of accurate information, and circumstances which will always make nursing less superficially attractive than some other careers must be honestly stated and explained.

Improved methods of selection will not directly increase the numbers of nurses, but they will reduce wastage. This will help recruitment, since a great deal of harm is done by the adverse reports of those who have had to give up on grounds of temperamental or educational unsuitability. Higher pre-entry requirements will also make nursing more attractive to good candidates, and money which is now spent unprofitably on trying to make good nurses from poor material will be available for all-round improvement of training.

The reduction in the numbers of young people from whom nurses can be drawn must not be made an excuse for reducing the age for beginning training. Rather it must be the foundation of a policy of raising it. While age and maturity are by no means synonymous, a good deal of wastage in the past has undoubtedly been due to a too early an introduction to hospital work.

Preparing Nurses for 1962

The preparation of nurses for 1962 must begin now, and two main groups have to be considered. First there are those, already in training or State-registered and holding posts of varying degrees of seniority, who will be responsible for training the students then. They must keep up-to-date not only in professional knowledge as it concerns their immediate tasks, but also in their general outlook, so that they are ready to adapt themselves to changing demands in passing on their knowledge to others. Refresher courses, in the widest sense, should be taken automatically at intervals. Such courses should be given at centres all over the country and should deal with such matters as the assessment of the needs of the particular groups of people with whom those participating in the courses come into contact, the best use of staff and the delegation of responsibilities and duties, as well as with what may, for want of a better name, be called technical problems. Training for teaching and administrative posts need not be lengthened beyond present limits, and may even be reduced as the benefits of better basic preparation begin to be felt. Again the emphasis must be on the understanding of social conditions and the establishment of good personal relationships, and the students taking all courses, whether refresher or preparatory training for new posts, must have ample time for reflection and discussion.

The second group comprises the student nurses of 1962, many of whom are at school or university today, or are in different forms of employment. The responsibility for their preliminary preparation rests on parents, clergy, teachers and the leaders of youth organisations. Professional education will always have as its aim the development of qualities of reliability, insight, understanding and true sympathy, but its success largely depends on the strength of the foundations laid in childhood and early adolescence. It cannot be expected to make good deficiencies in character training and education for citizenship, though it will continue work which has already been done in these fields.

The Report of the Working Party on the Recruitment and Training of Nurses threw interesting light on the variety of social and educational backgrounds from which nurses were drawn, and this will always be a factor to be considered in planning training. Some degree of standardisation is essential, and it can be safeguarded by the approval of training schemes by the General Nursing Council, but uniformity is neither practicable nor desirable.

University Education

Plans should not include the introduction of degree courses in nursing, as this would be incompatible with the purpose of university education as it is understood in this country. At the same time, graduates training as nurses call for a different presentation of material from those who have had a less advanced general education, and their needs must be met, while nurses capable of benefiting from university courses should be given the opportunity of reading for degrees after their training.

Changes in the course for qualification are long over-due. Just as nurses themselves are not a race apart, but ordinary citizens doing the work to which they are best suited, so they must be trained to see the people for whom they work against the background of the life of the community. With the development of health centres, delayed for the moment but to be resumed at the earliest possible date, and with the expansion of after-care schemes already working in some parts of the country, the hospitals need no longer be the only places in which nurses receive their training. Students will be able to enter schools of nursing where they will spend an initial period not, as is so often the case now, in being crammed for an examination, but in being introduced to their work. All instruction given must be related to the practical experience for which they are being prepared.

The Training Curriculum

The curriculum, while following a general pattern approved by the General Nursing Council, must be varied to suit the needs and mental equipment of the students, as it is today. Practical experience in all fields of nursing service must be given, and such a comprehensive course will not only be more truly educational, but will go far to meet the views of those who hold that a public health nurse, for example, does not need a full hospital training. The students must always be working members of the teams to which they are attached, and while minimum lengths of practice time and theoretical instruction must be stipulated, extension and repetition must be possible for those who need them. Short weekly study-periods in the schools must be given so that questions can be answered and difficulties dealt with as they arise, and ' blocks ' of school work will be necessary between the periods of practical experience, for revision and preparation. State registration should be given when the prescribed course has been completed satisfactorily, on a certificate to this effect from the principal of the school. State examinations could be superseded by internal tests taken at the conclusion of each piece of work, and a final examination in which all the experience and instruction of the course could be correlated.

Those wishing to specialise in a particular type of work could then receive more advanced tuition and further practical experience. Promotion would depend on the length and variety of experience in the field in which it was sought.

Shorter Training for Assistant Nurses

We have learned, during the last ten years or so, the value of assistant nurses, and they are now employed in almost all types of nursing in this country. To prepare them for such wide employment, they are required to take a year's training, followed by a further year of supervised work before they can be enrolled. A recognised qualification must be given for the sake of both the nurses and the public, but the present time and the pattern of preparation are too long and too rigid, and militate against recruitment. It should be quite possible for a nurse to be enrolled for one type of work after six months' training. The initial month in the school, which would be required of all pupils, could be followed by a fortnight of specialised preparation and four-and-a-half months' work in the nurse's chosen field. A certificate of enrolment could be given by the General Nursing Council, different colours being used for different kinds of work, and an assistant nurse who wished to change to another kind could do so after a fortnight in the school and a period of practice in the new sphere. Those who are prevented by home ties from doing full-time work should be able to gain their practical experience by longer periods of part-time training.

Nurses who, for any reason, do not complete the course for State-registration should be given enrolment in the branches which they have already studied, subject, of course, to their having had sufficient practical experience, and to satisfactory testimonials of general character and attitude towards their work. Assistant nurses wishing to become State-registered would have to take the full school course, but might have reduced periods of practical work in accordance with their previous experience.

The main factor in the problem of staffing the nursing service in this country is the number of men and women who are and who will be available.

The plan of training already outlined can apply equally well to students and pupils of both sexes, with adjustments such as the omission of work in women's wards and maternity departments and clinics from the curriculum for men, but male nurses can be more widely employed than they are now both in hospital and domiciliary work and in the industrial health and tuberculosis services.

Non-nursing duties must be carried out by non-nurses. As the supply of people who will be able to undertake these tasks, though larger, is not unlimited, labour-saving methods must be studied and introduced and the value of such duties in relation to the whole service must be made clear, so that those who do it enjoy it.

While it is impossible to say exactly what this country will need as its nursing service in ten years' time, it is clear that much thought must be given now to the future of nursing, so that as existing demands change and new ones arise, those who give the service will be ready to meet the needs of those whom they serve.

Nation's Nurses Conference (No. 12) Royal College of Nursing (contd.)

World Organisations and the Nurse

LAST week we reported the opening speeches at the Conference, No. 12 in the Nation's Nurses series, held at the Royal College of Nursing: these included Mr. Ritchie Calder's inaugural address; a paper on the structure and functions of the organisation of United Nations contributed by Miss D. McClellan, and the summary of the findings of the discussion groups which met throughout the conference. This week we continue our reports of the speeches, beginning with that of Sir G. Myrddin-Evans, K.C.M.G., C.B., Deputy Secretary, Ministry of Labour and National Service, and United Kingdom Government Member of the Governing Body of ILO, who concluded the speeches on the first day's sessions. His subject was The Aims, Uses and Methods of Work of the International Labour Organisation.

"There is a good deal of confusion as to what the International Labour Organisation is; some think that it is a trade union international," he said, "others confuse it with the World Federation of Trade Unions, which, when Britain and other western countries left it, became Communist dominated; it has also been confused with the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions which was formed following the breakaway from the World Federation of Trade Unions.

In fact, the International Labour Organisation is an inter-governmental-organisation and like others of these organisations, its members, of which there are now 65, are States. But there is a unique feature about ILO. Representatives of workers and employers are among the delegates, with full rights of participation, including speaking and voting, and although appointed by governments, they are free to vote and speak as they like, owing no constitutional responsibility to those appointing them. The ILO was the only governmental organisation set up after World War I which has survived World War II. We hope that it will continue until every abuse which it seeks to fight is abolished for ever. The first recorded action in this field was taken by the Welsh reformer, Robert Owen. At Aix la Chapelle he put forward a plea for international action to limit the working day. He met with no success, but his proposal was fulfilled 100 years later in the ILO far more elaborately than anything he had ever foreseen.

During the next 100 years many people followed Robert Owen's initiative. French reformers argued that reforms must be adopted simultaneously by competing nations. Daniel Legrand in Alsace took up the struggle again, but the French Government turned him down owing to lack of agreement with other countries. He appealed to other governments to adopt international legislation, but his appeal met with no response.

Early Pressure and Action

All this early work was not in vain; public opinion began to undergo a change, and the action passed from individuals to governments. A number of international meetings and conferences were held, and in 1901 an international association for labour legislation was set up at Basle. It has been called the First International Labour Office, but it was not until the first world war that there was real pressure to set up international labour standards. As a result of pressure from different quarters, when the Peace Conference met in 1919 a labour commission was set up to enquire into conditions of employment from the international aspect, to consider means of securing common action regarding these conditions and the setting up of a permanent agency.

The preamble to the first constitution of the ILO sets out the reasons for its existence. It says that ' universal and lasting peace can be established only if based on social justice. . . .' That is the reason for the establishment of ILO and why it is continued today, and will, we hope, be continued in the future. This statement, that peace can only be established if based on social justice, may be an over-simplification because it leaves out of account the existence of evil men with a lust for power, but it is true that injustice, poverty and misery do constitute conditions which make it much easier for evil men to bring about the wars which they desire. The constitution continues with a number of principles to which the work of the organisation should be dedicated. At Philadelphia in 1944, the organisation re-stated its devotion to peace and re-stated its aims. New declarations were embodied in the new constitution of the ILO; for example, 'labour is not a commodity'; 'poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere'.

It is the obligation of the ILO to further programmes designed to achieve a series of social objectives, such as full employment, a living wage, social security; adequate health and safety measures in industry; adequate food. President Roosevelt described this declaration as summing up the aspirations of an epoch which has known two world wars.

What aspirations has the ILO to make? Briefly a contribution to the preservation of peace, to do its best to abolish poverty and injustice, to raise standards of living and conditions of employment, and to be dedicated to a fuller, happier, freer life for all people everywhere.

Basis of ILO

How far has it succeeded? What are the methods of work and structure? It is based mainly on three organs. Firstly, the Conference with tri-partite representation in its most interesting form; each member state can send four delegates—two representing the government, one the workers and one the employers. Why that particular division between the groups? There was pressure at the Peace Conference to make representation equal between the groups, but the International Labour Conference was expected to deal with matters requiring parliamentary agreement and possible legislation, which only governments could take the responsibility for putting into effect in their own countries, and therefore they must have representation at least equal to the other parties to it.

Secondly, there is the Governing Body, somewhat like the Cabinet, whose functions have also been described as those of a 'board of directors'. It has direct responsibility for implementing the policy of the organisation.

Thirdly, there is the International Labour Office, which is rather like a British government department, on which it has, in fact, largely been modelled.

As regards machinery and procedure to establish social and labour standards the method is by the adoption of instruments calling for international action: (1) Conventions; (2) Recommendations; (3) Resolutions. I will dismiss Resolutions briefly: they are the weakest instrument of the Conference—an expression of views to the governments concerned, in the hope that action will be taken. Recommendations and Conventions are a good deal more serious; they are, and should be, regarded as quite solemn instruments. Both lay down settled principles or precise obligations on which members should act; they both have to be reported by member states to the competent organisation in the countries concerned—in our case, to the British Parliamant. The essential difference between them is that a Convention can only be ratified as a whole without alteration and if ratified there is an obligation to put its principles into effect. The Recommendation can be accepted with reservation and also there is freedom as regards timing. Broadly speaking, both are solemn instruments, but a Convention is more solemn and binding than a Recommendation. If any matter is not considered ripe for a Convention, it is often passed in the form of a Recommendation.

Up to 1939, the organisation had three main directions in its work: (1) quasi-legislative activities; (2) it compiled regularly a vast body of studies and reports on a variety of subjects; (3) the provision of commissions sent to different countries, either to enquire, or to advise governments. Then came the war, and at first the organisation carried on its work in Geneva, then, when the Germans overran Europe and no one knew what they might do in Switzerland, under the guidance of Mr. Winant, who was then its Director, the organisation went to Montreal, at the invitation of Canada, until the end of the war. The ordinary work could not go on; it was difficult to hold conferences. The staff was a small one—40 instead of 400—but this small staff carried on, preparing in faith for what would happen after the war. They did, in fact, hold a conference in New York in 1941 which was attended by Mr. Attlee. A few days after that conference came Pearl Harbour.

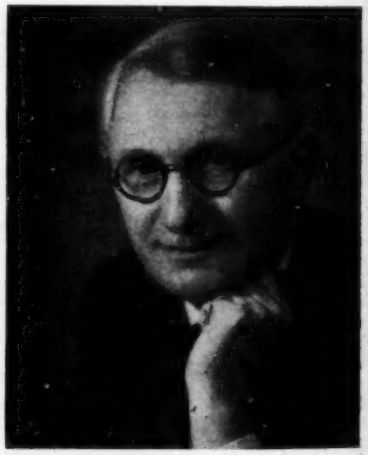
In 1944 the Philadelphia Conference was held. It brought together most of the free nations who were members of ILO—from 30 to 40 nations. It was in those days of April and May 1944 when we were waiting for D Day and did not know what would happen to us. It was an act of faith and out of the conference came the Philadelphia Declaration.

There were meetings of the Governing Body during the war, and in 1945 came the Paris Conference when the organisation resumed its full activities. The constitution was remodelled in 1946 in order to meet post-war needs and conditions and this amendment of the constitution laid upon governments much greater obligations with regard to Recommendations and Conventions than had originally been the case.

The staff at Geneva is now expanded to 600 and it can be said that in every other way the organisation is stronger than it has ever been before. It has continued its quasi-legislative work by Recommendations, Conventions and Resolutions; its work of studies and reports, and expansion of the practice of sending commissions to other countries.

A new development is that of Regional Conferences in order that groups of countries can get together to discuss problems peculiar to their particular region. Another new development was the setting up of industrial committees—this was Mr. Bevin's idea—mainly for workers and employers to get together (although Governments are also included) on an international basis by industries; for instance, the coal miners; the transport industry, and seven or eight other industries. They meet about every two years, and they certainly have performed useful functions. The organisation also embarked on operational work; it has taken its full share in the technical assistance programme inaugurated by President Truman and carried out under the aegis of the United Nations; it has provided technical and vocational training and it has set up field offices in different parts of the world to assist Governments in problems of manpower, migration and employment.

It is easier to get things done by co-operation than by quarrelling, and it is a most encouraging feature of the international work that the various international organisations have made a series of agreements under which they co-operate in their common aims.



Sir Guildhaume Myrddin-Evans

Let us try to assess the results: The ILO has drawn up about 100 Conventions and 100 Recommendations, and these form the International Labour Code; they deal with subjects of enormous interest, such as freedom of association, the employment of women, social security, etc., including equal pay. Some of these Conventions have been ratified by some States, some have been ratified by none, but you must not judge these things by such results. There may be all sorts of reasons, but they have had a tremendous effect; they are there on the statute book, and interested people can, as a result, bring pressure to bear on their governments to carry out the spirit, if not all the details, of a Convention. The commissions of technical assistance have given enormous help to a number of governments, helping them in shaping legislation as regards social progress. The technical assistance programme is spreading itself all over the world and we hope it will be of immense help in developing the under-developed countries. There is a tendency upon the part of non-colonial powers to 'twist the tails' of what are called 'colonial powers', and there is a great deal of ill-informed opinion in that respect; the 'tail twisters' are not necessarily vindictive or sentimental; they feel strongly that things are wrong. The ILO helps to put this kind of thing in a proper perspective; it channels these desires of the reformers in a way which will be of the greatest benefit to the inhabitants of these colonial territories. At the last meeting of the Governing Body, a representative of Latin American labour said, as a result of his examination, that conditions in colonial territories were better than in a good many sovereign states, and particularly than in those sovereign states who were most critical of the Colonial powers.

The ILO has been the means of a great deal of progress which would never have been made otherwise. The mere fact that different people from different countries have been getting together has meant that there is less chance of war than if this had not happened. The mere fact that ILO has been asked to investigate conditions within a country makes that country try to set its house in order. The world is a better place for the existence of ILO. The ILO is no longer just an interesting experiment. It plays a vital part in ensuring peace and bringing happiness and prosperity to people everywhere."

World Health

Dr. Neville Goodman, M.D., F.R.C.P., D.P.H., a principal medical officer, Ministry of Health, medical delegate to the Public Health Committee of Western Union, formerly Director of Field Services WHO, was the speaker on World Organisation for Health. "I would like to try to give you a general picture of why international health work started, how it developed and what is going on in that field today," said Dr. Goodman. "Too little is known about the technical, and particularly the health work of the United Nations. So far as health goes, there are two good reasons for this ignorance. First, it has been too successful. When doctors and nurses get round a table together, they usually agree—and agreement is not news. The only time when WHO hit the headlines was when Russia walked out. If you could make agreement as news-worthy as disagreement, you would deserve the Nobel Peace Prize. Secondly, international health work deals with preventive rather than curative medicine—and administrative preventive medicine at that. Clinical medicine dealing with cure can always be made interesting, sometimes exciting and even dramatic. But there is no drama in drains. 'We only remember our health when we lose it'—this was said 100 years ago, but it is true today. For these reasons WHO does not get the publicity it deserves.

It may be asked: Why international health? What is the need? Every country has its own system of national health and medical care; this may be very comprehensive, as in our own country, or it may be extremely rudimentary, as in undeveloped countries. But every country has some kind of service, and therefore how did the need arise for international health work? To find the answer, we must go back a long way.

Our first attitude to disease was that it was a punishment of the gods for sin. And then it came to be realised that certain diseases could be spread from person to person, and consequently from community to community and from country to country, and the reaction to that was to keep the disease out by complete isolation; you ran away from it, as was the case in the outbreaks of plague in this country; if you could not run away, you were forcibly kept within the infected community by a cordon sanitaire. It did not work because you cannot keep a community isolated indefinitely. In the 14th century, the Republic of Venice hit upon the idea of keeping ships from infected ports isolated for an arbitrary period. That period was originally 40 days—hence this system came to be called 'quarantine,' from the Italian quaranta, forty. All the maritime countries adopted systems of quarantine, but every system was different, even from port to port.

Dr. Neville Goodman

So at the beginning of the 19th century, there was an agitation to make the quarantine measures uniform, and eventually in 1851, the first international sanitary conference, as it was called, met in Paris—and that marks the beginning of international health work—so it is 101 years old. It did not start as a piece of international 'do-goodery'; it was not the pipe-dream of some chairborne doctor, or starry-eyed idealist. It started because a lot of hard-headed businessmen and doctors were forced to get together and agree on measures which would prevent epidemics spreading from country to country and yet not place an intolerable burden on trade and commerce. As soon as they got an effective international agreement, in 1903, it became obvious that there must be an international body to interpret the agreement and settle disputes, but more particularly to act as a post office for epidemic 'intelligence,' because no system of quarantine is any good unless there is a system of rapid and accurate information of where epidemics exist. The international office of Public Health in Paris was founded to administer the Conventions.

I do not think you can understand how WHO works today unless you know something of its previous history, and particularly because WHO absorbed several earlier bodies and carries on their work today. I am therefore already covering a great deal of the work of WHO. Epidemic intelligence, for instance, is carried on by WHO at Geneva today. News of the great pestilential diseases flows in constantly by radio, telegraph and telephone, and is circulated by WHO. I was rung up some weeks ago by the Chief Medical Officer in the Netherlands, who questioned me about the smallpox at Rochdale. I asked him how he knew about it, and he said that he 'got it from Geneva'.

International Agreements

By the end of the first world war, many other subjects came up which had to be dealt with by international agreement; for example, sera and vaccines, such as anti-diphtheria serum; (then recently discovered). Manufacturers or discoverers in each country set up their own unit of strength—and there was the widest disparity between the units recognised between the different countries—and agreement had to be reached to prevent chaos. There was the need, too, for uniformity in the classification of deaths—suppose a man suffered from diabetes, developed gangrene of the foot, and finally died from lobar pneumonia. His death would have to be classified under certain rules—it could not be classified under all three headings. But supposing the patient was an Italian suffering from the same complaints, and his death certificate came to the Registrar General in Rome and he worked to a different set of rules, this man's death might be entered differently in London or in Rome. Obviously until you could get international agreement on the rules for classification of the causes of death you could not compare the vital statistics between one country and another—it had to be standardised internationally. There was also the problem of letters to classify blood groups. The League of Nations had just been founded and it seemed clear that these other matters, in addition to quarantine, should be handed over to the League.

Spreading Medical Advances

Between the wars, the health organisation of the League did excellent work on very little money, in an unspectacular way—particularly in regard to international standards and putting across quickly advances in medical science. There is always a time-lag between medical discovery and its being put into administrative practice. The League set up expert committees on a number of subjects, so that the results of important discoveries might be known quickly all over the world. These two fields of work are going on today at Geneva. For example, penicillin was standardised and, since then, streptomycin.

UNRRA was the third international organisation. It was set up during the war at President Roosevelt's instigation to restore, as quickly as possible after the war, the damage done in the devastated occupied countries. It had a large health section and spent a lot of money (£55 million) on medical supplies, and it did in fact prevent, with the help of the countries themselves, the huge outbreak of epidemics which occurred after the first world war, and which might have been expected to have been greater after the second world war. So by the end of the war there were three international bodies concerned with health.

Those of us concerned were unanimous that the time had come to create a single world health organisation to absorb all the previous agencies and carry on their work and expand it; so in July 1946 there was a health conference in New York attended by 70 nations and they drew up a constitution for the WHO, which is well worth study by those interested. It went further than any previous constitution of any previous organisation—for the first time positive health was mentioned, also mental health, the importance of the child, the importance of health propaganda and health education, and it laid down that health was in fact a human right and that governments had a duty to provide it as far as possible. That constitution, in effect, allows governments of the world today to do almost anything in the field of health, provided they agree and will give the money. The new aspect developed by WHO was the direct help to governments to strengthen their national health administrations, which UNRRA had to some extent started.

How does it work? WHO has no executive powers. It can only work at the request of governments. When this happens, an expert in a particular problem may carry out a survey, and consult the government concerned, and in agreement with them he comes back with a programme. These vary: perhaps he may suggest sending out teams with a minimum amount of equipment and for a limited time, with the idea of training local people to help themselves; or perhaps a series of lecturers or experts to visit the country; or perhaps it will be better to take people from the country itself and award them fellowships to train abroad. Whatever the programme decided on, it is brought back to Geneva and costed—and there is never enough money! Because of this, at an early stage certain priorities were laid down: schemes for malaria, tuberculosis, venereal diseases, maternity and child health, nutrition, environmental sanitation and mental health. It is laid down also that a country must be prepared to go on with the scheme after international help is withdrawn, and secondly that the country helped must itself pay the 'local currency' expenses—that is the costs within the country which can be paid out of local currency.

Regarding the structure of WHO, it was decided to decentralise the work as much as possible, and the world was divided into six regions with headquarters at Alexandria, New Delhi, Manila, Washington, Geneva (for Europe) and Brazzaville (for Africa). The structure includes an Assembly (parliament), Executive Board (cabinet) ad Secretariat (civil service).

The budget of the WHO runs at about £2½ million a year. It was a little over one-fifth of what was spent on providing spectacles under the National Health Service last year. This country pays 11 per cent. of this sum. What does it represent to you? If we all paid the same amount of taxes, it would represent one halfpenny each per year—and I hope that you will agree that this is reasonably well spent.

WHO is not the only international organisation which has health functions, of course. Many specialised agencies of the United Nations have health functions; most important, perhaps, is the United Nations' International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF). It received money from UNRRA and other bodies, and from individuals. It was created to meet the particular needs of children in the post-war period, and now that minimum needs have been met, it is carrying on a very large medical programme, particularly the well known BCG inoculation; 50 million children have been tested and 20 million have been vaccinated with BCG all over the world. These programmes of UNICEF are carried out under the technical direction of WHO.

ILO also is concerned with health—industrial health, that of seamen, and medical insurance schemes. And, finally, there are the great voluntary bodies, such as the Rockefeller Foundation, the International Red Cross, the Quakers, the Missionary societies, etc.

May I quote a passage written 200 years ago which seems to me to sum up the spirit of international health work better than anything I have ever read: 'No man is an island intire of its self'; wrote John Donne; 'every man is a piece of the Continent, a part of the maine; if a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a promontorie were, as well as if a Mannor of thy friends or thine own were. Any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankinde; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee.'"

UNESCO

The second address on Thursday was given by Mr. W. E. F. Ward, C.M.G., Deputy Educational Adviser, Colonial Office, who gave a very interesting and provocative account of the work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO). He said:

The preamble to UNESCO's constitution states: 'Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed.' I am not altogether sure how true that is; do wars not sometimes begin in the stomachs of men. But UNESCO exists to promote that co-operation between nations in matters of education, science and culture in the hope that, by acquiring the habit of getting together on politically harmless matters, men may acquire the habit of getting together on politically dangerous topics.

UNESCO has two sorts of aims: a long-term aim of serving the cause of peace, and a more immediate short term aim of working together in education, science and anything that can be grouped under 'culture.'

The organisation is on the general lines of the United Nations Organisation: there is a Director General (a very distinguished Mexican), an international secretariat of 800 people, and an office in Paris; there is an executive board composed of 18 permanent people from different countries but who are not official representatives of their countries. (The British representative is Sir Ronald Adam, Chairman of the British Council.) There is an annual conference held alternately in Paris and some other centre which lasts about a month.

As regards organisation, with this mixed list of activities, the UNESCO secretariat is divided up into divisions, each with its own organisation. It is a long list, but I will mention a few important ones:

The Exchange of Persons Division exists to provide opportunities for people to get outside their own country and broaden their minds and experience in other countries, by fellowships, study-travel, etc.; an opportunity of seeing their colleagues working in other parts of the world, facing similar problems and using different methods.

The Education Division exists to promote consultation and professional contacts between teachers all over the world. Here we see an example of an activity of UNESCO which is carried out in other divisions as well—technical assistance to underdeveloped countries. This brings me up against a fundamental difficulty of UNESCO and one of its weaknesses. There are 65 member States in the organisation—Nicaragua being the latest to join—and comparatively few of them are like ourselves, or the United States or France, for instance, in being well developed, and well equipped with professional skill of all kinds. The majority are poor not only in economic resources, but also in technical skills; therefore we have the difficult position that a few of the biggest countries pay nearly half the total budget of UNESCO, whereas the 60 or so others make up the other half; therefore at the conference you find that 60 out of 65 are in favour of piling up the bill higher and higher, so that there is more money available for them, while the paying countries are in favour of economy. The United States and ourselves, to put it plainly, are pretty well equipped with doctors, nurses, engineers and technicians of every kind, and do not require this kind of help; whereas the under-developed countries are only too happy to have experts to tell them how to do things. They get most of the advantages and pay little; we are getting hardly any benefits and we pay a great deal. So successive United Kingdom delegations are always hampered by Treasury restrictions on the budget.

Promoting Self-Help

In education one of the most valuable things UNESCO is doing is to provide help to countries who want to improve their education but do not know how to. They lack money, but even if they had it they would not know how to use it. UNESCO cannot give them much financial help, but it can provide the 'know-how.' One of its most valuable activities is the educational mission—a team of up to six people who go out at the request of a member State to give advice on improving its education. But the educational mission by itself is not enough. You can show somebody how to do a thing and then go away, but it is a good thing to return and ask how they are getting on; you may find that they have forgotten what you told them; it is a good plan to have a follow-up. But there is a difficulty here—many of the countries have not enough of their own people trained to carry out the advice they receive. So UNESCO has started a new activity which looks excellent on paper—a plan for regional education centres for poor countries who have not the funds or the skill to train their own people. All countries in the region can send their young people to be trained. The centre in Mexico is the first one to be started; the second centre is planned to be somewhere in Egypt and will serve the Arabic countries of the Middle East. Later it is hoped to open half a dozen of these centres in different parts of the world.

Natural Sciences—this is probably the most efficient branch because scientists, generally speaking, had their international contacts before the war and know what they want today. The head of the Natural Sciences division secretariat is one of the most distinguished French physicists. A week or two ago an agreement was signed by a number of European countries for an international atomic research centre in order to assist small countries which could not afford to do this on their own. An International Computation Centre—on the same lines as the international atomic research centre—is another project. We hear about electronic brains; they cost a tremendous amount of money, but save enormous sums once you have them. They are beyond the reach of small, poor countries. This is a service which is being planned by UNESCO in Western Europe and will be valuable for solving mathematical problems quickly.

Social Sciences—here is one thing that UNESCO is already doing in the social sciences—studying the causes of international tension. UNESCO is getting an international team of psychologists and sociologists to investigate this. It has never been scientifically studied before, and for the first time UNESCO has been able to assemble a team in an attempt to give really scientific answers to the question as to what it is that makes war seem better than the thing that we are suffering from, whatever that thing may be.

Cultural Activities—one small example, but it would not have happened without UNESCO: in Italy a number of libraries were run by German scientific and learned bodies; they were supported by German funds, and when the war ended these libraries were left with no one to look after them. They would soon have been ruined by neglect and there would have been a great loss to scholarship. UNESCO stepped in and took over for two or three years while the various governments among themselves agreed what should be done.

I have given you only a few examples out of many of the work accomplished by UNESCO. The problem is that 65 delegates meet together from all types of country; it is easy for such countries as the United States and the United Kingdom who can produce specialists on every subject, but the small countries can perhaps only send one or two delegates and these must sit through all the sessions, some of which deal with subjects they know nothing about. On the other hand, they feel that they owe it to their own country's honour to take part in the discussions.

UNESCO has achieved some success; but it will not be a thorough success unless everybody gets behind it. There is nothing to take its place. Its people are doing a job that has never been undertaken before, and we owe it to UNESCO to try to understand, help and encourage it when we decide that it is doing something useful. Even if professionally UNESCO is not perhaps quite so much your concern as WHO, as citizens you should have a great deal to do with it; one of the most powerful influences on UNESCO should be from the British side and the support of every man and woman is needed.

At the conference a large part of the time seems to be wasted time—it is hard work and a weariness of the flesh, but still there is nothing to take UNESCO's place and therefore this toil is a necessary part of the process of achieving an international society. We British are accustomed to sitting on committees. It is a good thing to work in a democratic society by persuading committees of amateurs to give us the instructions we want, and then we can do what we meant to do all along—but now we do it not in our own strength, but with the much greater strength of a democratic society behind us. If by similar work we can achieve an international society through UNESCO all this slow, halting, stumbling, groping will be abundantly worth while.

Declaration of Human Rights

Miss J. M. Bowie, B.A., Barrister-at-Law, was the speaker at the afternoon session, taking as her subject The Declaration of Human Rights and our Responsibility. Miss Bowie was well qualified to speak on this question, for she was the United Kingdom delegate to the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations 1948-51; she is a Vice-President of the British Federation of University Women.

Miss J. M. Bowie.

"It is not easy to appreciate fully the Declaration of Human Rights unless you know the background which explains it," she said. "People sometimes say they are in favour of a thing without being really aware of what it means. The nursing profession is one in which you must have accuracy, precision and carefulness, and these should operate also in other questions of everyday life. Perhaps you may say that this Declaration is an international document which concerns governments rather than individuals. Yet, if you have read it, you will remember that in the Preamble it says that it is: 'A common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations to the end that every individual and every organ of society, keeping this declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms.' It is a matter for you as individuals and as members of an organisation like the College. The document is drawn up on legal lines, and the word 'whereas' which occurs frequently in the Preamble indicates what it is all about; you will find the explanation in the words 'whereas disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people. . . .'

Faith in Fundamental Rights

The Declaration of Human Rights is proclaimed by the United Nations. How does it come to issue such a document as this? The Charter of the United Nations drawn up at San Francisco in 1945 begins: 'We, the peoples of the United Nations, determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to re-affirm our faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person. . . .' This was the aim of the United Nations—to affirm the dignity of human beings and the equal rights of men and women of all countries, large and small. It is because of this that the Commission was set up in 1945 and, in 1946, began its work of drawing up a Bill of Human Rights. The Universal Declaration is the result of three years' work by the Commission.

Certain countries, 18 in number, were elected to serve on the Commission and to send one representative only, and for three years I served on the Commission. We had difficulties because of the variety of the countries represented, as for instance, the United States, the wealthiest country in the world; India with millions of poverty-stricken peasants; Guatemala, a small country with about two million agricultural population, few of whose women have higher education; and Russia, an authoritarian country. The representatives of many different countries will approach the questions with every possible variety of attitude affected by their own religion, tradition, by their social system, their education and their own laws. Out of all their ideas it is difficult to agree on something which could have universal application.

The Universal Declaration is not a law; it is not a treaty. It is a statement of ideals, something that the peoples of the United Nations agreed upon as a standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations. It belongs, as far as many countries are concerned, to the future.

When the members of the first Assembly at San Francisco decided that they wanted this Charter, we were just emerging from a terrible war and the barbarous acts in people's minds were those which had occurred in Europe—at Belsen, for example—and when the Declaration was drawn up, barbarous acts were still happening. Unless we all realise that we have a responsibility that these barbarous acts shall not continue, this Declaration will not be respected here and all over the world; we must not turn our heads away from horrible things, or unpleasant things; it is our business to do something about them.

There have been other declarations of human rights in history: that of the French Revolution, the Declaration of the Rights of Man and the Declaration of American Independence. You will find some of the same ideas in this Declaration, but you will find more and newer ideas.

The first Article of the Universal Declaration begins: 'All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights'. Do you think this is obvious and true? Equally true of the child born here in a modern hospital and of a little coloured child born in the slums of Johannesburg? The more you think about it, the more you realise that we are not all born free and equal in dignity and rights. It is a standard of achievement to aim at, but we have a long way to go. If, with that first sentence in mind, you go through the whole Declaration, you will find problems sufficient to keep your organisation very busy for a long time to come.

It took the Commission and the Assembly a long time to agree on Article 1, and you may wonder why. We spent a long time discussing the phrase 'they are endowed with reason and conscience'. Who endowed them? How are they endowed? The Christians said 'they are endowed by God'; other faiths said 'what God?'; we had disquisitions from a learned Chinese philosopher, and a materialist one from the Russians; in the end we had to say simply 'they are endowed'. Science, philosophy, religion are missing from that one sentence. To have something all can accept, you have to leave some things to be filled in by individuals.

The Declaration states: 'Everyone is entitled to the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration without distinction of any kind'—that is to say, not certain rights for men but not for women; not some rights for white but not for coloured; some for people of sovereign states but not for people of territories which are not self-governing. There is nothing in the laws of this country which makes for discrimination on the basis of religion or colour, before the law. All people are equal in theory, but how far do ordinary individuals live up to that?

Article 4 says that 'no one shall be held in slavery or servitude'. Many people would say 'But there is no slavery now'. However, two years ago the United Nations found it necessary to set up a committee to investigate the question of slavery. There are still many customs which affect women and which are equivalent to slavery. In some countries girls are still sold as brides. In this country we have many women's organisations which protect women's rights, and we have got at least 90 per cent. of the equality we have fought for. But what about other countries of the world? There are a number of countries in which women are not sufficiently advanced to have their own organisations, countries where the women need our help. The question of women's status is 'one and indivisible' like peace; and if women suffer degradation anywhere, that affects our status.

Article 5 says that 'no one shall be subjected to torture . . .' The Status of Women Commission of the United Nations only a week or two ago received a report from a number of women's organisations on the circumcision of young girls which is a regular practice in the Sudan and some other Central African countries. It is a horrible custom and we ought to know about it, for it makes the lives of children and women miserable. We have to accept some responsibility, for ours is the responsible government in many cases. In view of the proposal to give self-government to the Sudan, the men of the Sudan must realise that the women of the world are watching them.

Economic Freedom

Past Declarations have nearly always dealt with political rights, the rights that abolish tyranny, the right to vote; but men have not always freedom, even with political rights. Trade union rights, for instance, may be withheld. Until a man has economic freedom as well as political freedom, he is not really a free man. And in the Declaration beginning with Article 22 you find phrases which are new to declarations of this kind—'social security', 'the right to work' and 'the right to an adequate standard of living'.

There is the 'right to education'. We are worrying about education cuts here, but do we remember that half the children in the world at present have no education whatever? We are right to get agitated about our own standards, but what about the children in the Colonies? We are making a good beginning, but we should not be complacent about it; education is still miserably limited in some of our Colonies, and it is our responsibility.

Article 29 is fundamental to the whole Declaration. It says: 'Everyone has duties to the community, in which alone the free and full development of the personality is possible'. We owe the community something, just as it owes something to us. If we could implement this, I think we should implement the whole of the Declaration of Human Rights."

[The report of the Conference will be concluded next week.]

DEFECTIVE

The eighth of a series of ten weekly articles on hospital and nursing law.

Law Notes for Nurses—VIII. Hospital Staff

THE following are some points on the law of master and servant and kindred matters likely to concern matrons, sisters and others in positions of responsibility. Others will be dealt with in succeeding articles. It is important that any nursing officer authorised to engage staff keeps within the limits of the authority given to her, particularly as regards pay, hours and conditions of work for which—for most grades—there are now nationally negotiated conditions, any deviation from which is a breach of regulations. Every hospital will probably have standard forms of contract for use in engaging staff of different grades and it is important that it should not be altered without proper authority.

Injuries to Staff

If anyone working in hospital is injured without any negligence or incompetence or wrongdoing of any other person or any breach of statutory safety rules (for example, in the laundry under the Factories Acts), the injured worker's only right is to benefit under the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act 1946. But if the injury is due to the negligence or incompetence or wrongdoing of any person, the injured party may claim damages against that person, and, if the fault occurred in the course of the employment of the wrongdoer, usually against his employer also. The really important example here is that of injury of one hospital employee through the negligence of another, when the hospital authority may be called upon to pay perhaps very substantial damages according to the nature and extent of the injury. The employer is similarly liable to pay damages in respect of injury due to breach of any statutory safety regulations.

From what has been said it will be realised how important it is for any person in a position of responsibility to keep a look out for possible causes of accident, and by precept, example and, if necessary, admonition, to see that the need for care is appreciated by all working under her. It must be emphasised, too, that responsibility for an accident can arise through negligence in supervision.

Accident Rules

Most hospitals will have rules regarding the reporting of accidents and it is most important for the following reasons that such rules should be strictly observed. First, almost any accident might be made the basis of a claim to common law damages and it is not desirable, long after the event, to have to depend on unassisted memory as to what actually happened. Secondly, a claim might be made after a witness has left the service of the hospital and his testimony might be overlooked. Thirdly, even where no claim to damages is made, evidence that an injury occurred on duty is important as establishing the injured person's right if incapacitated, whether temporarily or permanently, to benefits under the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946, the benefits under that Act being somewhat higher than under the National Insurance Act, 1946, for sickness or incapacity caused otherwise than by accident at work.

This last reason brings us to a serious practical point. What accidents should be reported? On the one hand it is manifest that a mishap can be so trifling that no sensible employee would bother to report it. On the other hand it will be obvious to any nurse that an apparently trifling accident (for example, the prick of a needle) may lead to serious consequences. Common sense must, therefore, here be the guide, and, it may be suggested that really trifling mishaps should not be subject of formal report until there is ground for believing all is not well, as, for example, the pricked finger festering.

All employers of labour, including hospitals, now have to employ a certain proportion of registered disabled persons. It is important therefore, to remember that special precautions may be necessary for their safety and that failure to take such precautions may result in damages being given against the hospital if harm results.

Finally it may be recalled that tuberculosis has now been made a scheduled disease under the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946 in respect of nurses, doctors and others regularly in contact with patients suffering from that disease. The effect of these regulations is that if any nurse or other person within them contracts tuberculosis, it is accepted, without further proof, that the disease was caused by the nature of her duties so that she is entitled to benefit under the Act. In like circumstances it is fair to suppose that a similar presumption would arise in respect of a claim to a pension under the superannuation regulations, so as to entitle the nurse or other person to be considered for the higher rates which the Minister is empowered to pay in respect of accidents on duty. From what has been said it will be seen that it is important to keep proper records of all staff regularly, even over a short period, in contact with patients suffering from tuberculosis.

Reports on Staff

There are various kinds of staff reports and various methods of making them. Ward sisters and others responsible for staff or students, will, of course, follow the rules of their own hospital. But, whatever the system, it may be observed that there are certain things to be borne in mind regarding adverse reports.

If a report is true it is not actionable. If it is false and defamatory it is still not actionable if made honestly and without malice (that is, improper motive) by a person having a duty—even a moral duty—to make the report, and being made to a person properly interested to receive the information or opinion. It must be pointed out however that if extravagant language is used or wild charges made this, in itself, may afford evidence that the maker of the report was not acting honestly or without malice. Privilege is also lost by communication of the report to anyone other than the proper person to receive it (for example, the matron, or, perhaps, the senior sister tutor) and this applies whether the report be oral or written. But if a privileged report is communicated by the recipient (e.g., the matron) to someone else, the original maker of the report is not responsible for that further communication and does not lose 'privilege' thereby. But the matron, herself, will be liable in damages if the report is false and defamatory unless the communication by her is to another proper officer—or to the Board or Committee—on a proper occasion.

It must be remembered that generally no one can prevent an aggrieved person bringing a libel or slander action even though unsuccessfully. It is, therefore, desirable when making adverse reports not only to be careful in the choice of language and to say no more than the facts justify but also to take all reasonable precautions to avoid the report being seen by unauthorised persons, as, for example, taking care not to leave it about written or half-written on the desk and either to hand it direct to the recipient or to leave or send it in a closed envelope marked 'confidential'. If the report is made by word of mouth it should not be made in the hearing of anyone not properly concerned.

And what of the vexed question, 'Should adverse reports be shown to the person reported on ?' This is a matter of opinion. But from a legal standpoint it may be said that technically disclosure to the person commented upon does not make a report actionable that was not actionable before. However, it must equally be appreciated that showing the report to the person concerned does give her evidence of its contents and so increases the risk of action on an injudiciously worded report. Any action brought would, in this case, be against the maker of the report or, if the recipient had been alleged to have improperly communicated it to someone else, against the recipient. If, however, the recipient (e.g. the matron) herself on proper occasion makes a communication to the committee on a report she has received from a ward sister, neither she nor the committee will be liable—but only the ward sister—should it afterwards prove that the original report was not made honestly and without malice.

Testimonials and References

What has to be said about testimonials and references is substantially the same as about reports. Both testimonials and references are privileged if given on a proper occasion to a person properly interested to receive the information, always provided what is said is said honestly and without malice (that is, without any motive other than that of helping a prospective employer to form a proper judgment) even though in fact untrue and defamatory. But this privilege is lost if there is undue publication that is, if more people than is reasonably necessary see the defamatory statement. Thus, to communicate the statement to a responsible shorthand-typist may be in order but to allow a copy to go through the ordinary filing where it may be seen by many of the staff might lose the privilege. Likewise, the use of a postcard would lose the privilege as, probably, would the sending even in a closed envelope if not marked 'confidential' if the envelope is addressed to the matron or another officer of a large hospital where, in all probability, letters not so marked are opened centrally and then distributed.

Once a testimonial gets into the hands of the recipient who is commented upon he will have no cause of action in respect of his own communication of the contents to third parties thereafter, for he pleases himself in so communicating it. But if a reference which is false and defamatory is received and the person receiving it communicates it to others except on a privileged occasion that constitutes a cause of action for damages against that person and, possibly also against the employing hospital authority. What is a privileged occasion is to be decided on the basis of whether what is done is done in reasonable pursuance of a duty to the person's own employer or of some other legal or moral duty. But 'moral duty' must be interpreted narrowly and not as cover for busybodying activities.

Possibly the best general advice on testimonials is that, whilst never lacking the courage to say or write disagreeable things frankly when necessary, one should always take care to do so in moderate and carefully chosen language. This will give greater weight to your words as well as helping to avoid legal actions. Remember, too, in less serious cases a testimonial or reference which, whilst saying nothing bad, studiously avoids excessive praise may convey all that is necessary. Also, since no employer or other person is bound to give a testimonial or answer as a referee it may be justifiable in exceptional cases to refuse one or the other or both.

Most hospitals will have their own rules regarding the giving of testimonials and references and such rules should be rigidly adhered to, their purpose being generally to achieve as far as possible, fairness and to avoid risk of legal action.

Finally, remember a favourable testimonial or reference known by the giver to be untrue may subject him to legal action by anyone who suffers damage thereby.

Book Reviews

TEACHING IN SCHOOLS OF NURSING (Second Edition). —by Alice M. Jackson, M.A.(Cantab.), B.A., and Katharine F. Armstrong, Diploma in Nursing, University of London, S.R.N., C.M.B.Cert., Sister Tutor Cert. (Faber and Faber, Ltd., 24, Russell Square, London, W.C.1. 12s. 6d.).

This second edition of a book on methods of teaching applied to schools of nursing is a timely reminder of basic principles. The first part of the book by Miss Jackson is easy to read, yet it examines most of the problems met with in teaching and keeps before the reader the best that the study of psychology can give in solving them constructively.

The personality of the sister tutor, the various mental and emotional patterns of behaviour probable in student nurses, and the reasons for them, are examined carefully and the needs of the patients can be sensed, forming the background throughout.

Discipline stressed as a co-operative activity touching 'the springs of character', the effect of interest on intelligence and the important part reason and understanding play in aiding memory, are only a few of the many important points touched on which should help all who teach, whether in classrooms or wards, to tackle their task with renewed interest and enthusiasm.

The second part of the book assumes agreement with the first and applies its principles to the curriculum of schools of nursing based on the General Nursing Council syllabus. It outlines a typical block system scheme of training and a well-known study day system. It also includes valuable suggestions about note taking, testing ability and progress and function of the ward sister in the training school.

There would appear to be two errors on page 53. In line 17 'blood' appears where 'urine' is intended and in line 28 'lymph' seems to have been substituted for 'plasma'.

Appendix three 'The Nurse's Personal Library' is useful if limited (incidentally Bocock and Haines' Applied Anatomy for Nurses appears as Applied Anatomy for Artists), and the bibliography in the foreword is another useful feature.

This book can certainly be recommended to all tutors and ward sisters engaged in instructing student nurses, whether they are at the outset of their career or after years of practice they would appreciate a stimulating re-statement of the values on which their work is based.

STUDENT NURSES' ASSOCIATION CENTRAL REPRESENTATIVE COUNCIL

Candidates' Election Policies

EASTERN AREA

General Hospitals: two vacancies, two candidates.

MISS A. H. BELCHER

Belcher, Audrey Hilda, Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge (general hospital 373 beds).

To stimulate more nurses to become members of the Student Nurses' Association and exchange professional, educational and social activities and ideas. To encourage a greater interchange of ideas between the Units in my area and try to help student nurses to realise and take an active interest in their nursing responsibilities. I would sponsor any movement inviting foreign members as official delegates to the annual general meeting and encourage exchange of methods and principles with foreign student nurses.

MISS D. M. KEABLE

Keable, Dorothy Margaret, Hillingdon Hospital, Uxbridge (general hospital, 705 beds).

My policy is to encourage more social activity amongst the nurses and more inter-Unit activity; to make better known the work of the Student Nurses' Association and get more nurses to become members; to draw their interests to the various functions held by the Royal College of Nursing for their benefit; and to realise the need of a better understanding between all members of the nursing profession.

LONDON AREA

General Hospitals: one vacancy, two candidates.

MISS O. J. ADAMS

Adams, Olive Joan, Bolingbroke Hospital, London, S.W.11 (general hospital, 135 beds).

That all nurses should have especially inculcated in them during their training a knowledge and a real understanding of the spirit of their profession. As the Health Service increases, the number of nurses required will almost inevitably outnumber those who are endowed with a sense of vocation. Nevertheless, with the right emphasis laid on this important aspect during their training, their nursing will then be marked by a spirit of genuine, instinctive and unfailing courtesy, patience and tact—worthy of the dignity of those professions which devote themselves so entirely to the service of humanity.

MISS B. M. BISHOP

Bishop, B. M., University College Hospital, London, W.C.1 (general hospital, tuberculosis and geriatric units, 961 beds).

If elected, my policy would be to encourage unity between all student nurses in all hospitals, so that together we may give help to both individual and common endeavours and unite in solving the problems of student nurses. If elected, I should consider it an opportunity to make every effort of ensuring that the cause of nurses in training in the smaller hospitals, and those hospitals suffering from shortage of staff, had full representation, in the hope that wide discussions of those problems would stimulate students training in better staffed hospitals to assist with their solution, both now and after completion of their training. I would earnestly endeavour to serve the wishes of all members, whenever possible.

MIDLAND AREA

General Hospitals: one vacancy, four candidates.

MISS B. MARSDEN

Marsden, Barbara, City Hospital, Derby (general hospital, midwifery, 320 beds).

In view of the rising cost of living, one of the main items in my policy, if elected, will be an endeavour to improve the financial position of student nurses. An allowance for shoes, stockings, textbooks and examination fees would help, but nurses merely exist on their present salary; and the marriage allowance for male students is deplorable. The State Finals, I feel, could be revised. Why should students who have passed in certain subjects be made to take them again because they have failed in some other subject, and also have to pay the examination fee again for those subjects already passed ?

MISS Y. M. SCHOLES

Scholes, Yvonne Mary, Derbyshire Royal Infirmary, Derby (general hospital, 450 beds).

My policy is, in the interest of all student nurses: to develop the scope of the student nurse and to seek for her the status equal to that of any other professional student; by either an increase in salary and emoluments, or a reduction in taxation, give the student encouragement in her profession, so that the desire for a better-paid job does not become a distraction from her career (this also may encourage would-be nurses to take up training); to endeavour to uphold the traditions of the profession by a greater unity of spirit between subordinates and superiors and foster the advancement of the profession. In order to increase the interest in the Student Nurses' Association and make it a strong army to conquer its adversities, I would suggest functions should be organised to make known to all the value of the Association and to increase inter-Unit fellowship at the same time.

MISS J. I. A. M. SANDERS

Sanders, June Ivy Audrey Marian, Leicester Royal Infirmary, Leicester (general hospital, 600 beds).

I believe the scheme of nurse training in this country to be second to none, and will always endeavour to maintain the high standards for which our training schools are renowned. My aims are continued and fuller recognition of student status, and promotion of a better understanding of nursing and nurse training, thus aiding recruitment. I would encourage greater social activity between Units and with other youth organisations. Only by the continued exchange of ideas to widen her vision can the student nurse become a good citizen, ready and able to take her part in the training of a future generation of nurses.

MISS M. S. SIZER

Sizer, Margaret Shirley, City General Hospital, Sheffield (general hospital, maternity unit, 900 beds).

If elected I shall do my best to uphold and maintain the rights of the student nurse's status; to make all student nurses realise that a patient is a human being and not just another 'case' to be admitted into hospital, and to treat him with kindliness, as one would wish to be treated oneself. To ensure a definite block system of studying, thus preventing any loss of ward experience, and probably sleep, for the night staff. To encourage all nurses at the beginning of their career to understand and join the Student Nurses' Association.

Miss D. M. Keable

Miss M. S. Sizer

NORTHERN IRELAND

No valid nominations received.

NORTHERN AREA

General Hospitals: one vacancy, two candidates.

MISS P. ALLINGHAM

Allingham, Patricia, The General Infirmary at Leeds (general hospital, 945 beds).

If I am elected to the Council I will make a sincere attempt to enroll all student nurses into the Student Nurses' Association. In this way we can support the Royal College of Nursing, giving them greater representation on committees and councils dealing with matters concerning the student and trained nurse.

MISS S. M. WHALE

Whale, Shirley Margaret, Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle-on-Tyne (general hospital, 700 beds).

My aim is first and foremost to ensure that our patients in hospital have the best nursing care we can provide by upholding and defending the privileges and rights of student nurses. I will encourage the further recognition of the student's status. I should encourage the block system which is of great importance in the maintenance of a high standard of work, both practical and theoretical. I feel that much more can be done to promote inter-communication and exchange of ideas amongst nurses, and opportunities should be made for this. Recreational activities should be encouraged with other hospitals and the work done by the Association should be made more widely known.

SCOTLAND

Special Hospitals: no valid nominations received.

WESTERN AREA

General Hospitals: one vacancy, four candidates.

MISS K. E. BOXER

Boxer, Katharine Elizabeth, Royal United Hospital, Bath (general hospital, fever and ophthalmic experience, 473 beds).

My policy, if elected, would be to maintain the high standard of the profession which our predecessors have worked so hard to attain. Our main object is to provide the best possible nursing care for the patient. In order to achieve this, I would work to promote good-will and friendship with other training schools, and so have further suggestions and knowledge of the different methods of work in the various schools in the area. I feel also that 100 per cent. membership of the Student Nurses' Association would strengthen our ability to attain this object.

MISS R. N. JAMES

James, Rosemary Nancy, South Devon and East Cornwall Hospital, Greenbank, Plymouth (general hospital, 340 beds).

If elected a representative, I should endeavour to promote a wider interest in the Student Nurses' Association and encourage more inter-Unit meetings to enable nurses to exchange ideas on both professional and recreational matters. It would be my policy to work incessantly for the student status for nurses in training—this is a matter which requires the careful attention of each individual nurse. In my opinion it is essential to interest the nurse in the Association and in the wider aspects of her profession at the beginning of her training.

MISS M. V. NEWMAN

Newman, Mary Veronica, Princess Elizabeth Orthopaedic Hospital, Exeter (orthopaedic hospital, 161 beds).

My policy would be to encourage all student nurses to take a keen and live interest in the activities both professional and recreational of their Association, to help to foster a better unity, sense of comradeship and mutual helpfulness as we work together for a common purpose, remembering always during our training the importance of the 'little things'. Also to try in every way to become a responsible and trusted member of the nursing profession, and a good citizen.

MISS N. SNOW

Snow, Nora, General Hospital, Swansea (general and eye hospital, 350 beds).

If elected as a representative I will undertake to watch carefully the interests of my fellow nurses. I will undertake to safeguard student status; to see that the educational standard of the student is not decreased; and to see that any economies which may have to be made (owing to the financial crisis) shall not affect the high standard of the nursing of the patient.

How to Vote

THIS year we have elections in four areas, and we greatly hope that every member of the Association will use her vote in the election of new members to the Central Representative Council.

Members who attended last year's Annual General Meeting will remember that Miss Lange, the Returning Officer for the election, announced the percentage of members who had used their vote, and that this was not as high as it might have been. One wonders why—is it because all members do not know the candidate personally? Is it because the honorary secretaries find it impossible to distribute the voting papers? Is it because the voting papers get put away in a drawer and forgotten until too late? The candidates' policies are published on pages 497-8 to help members decide for whom to cast their votes.

Members entitled to vote (that is, all who were members of the Association on January 1, 1952) should obtain their papers from the Unit honorary secretary. Filling in the voting paper and posting it to the Returning Officer is every member's personal responsibility to her Association.

FOR HONORARY SECRETARIES OF UNITS

During the coming week, voting papers will be sent to honorary secretaries of Units in London, the Midland, Northern and Western areas. Also a list of members eligible to vote and a sticky label for each voter, addressed to Miss Lange.

SECRET BALLOT

The essence of such a ballot is that it is strictly confidential between the voter and the Returning Officer, who destroys the papers after the count has been taken and the results announced. It is to honour this principle and to preserve the integrity of this democratic form of election that each member is required to cast her vote and return her paper herself.

DO NOT FORGET

1. To read the instructions for voting very carefully.
2. To mark with X the name of the candidate for whom you decide to vote.
3. To complete Section II of the voting paper by filling in your full name, your address and usual signature, and the name of your Unit.
4. To post your voting paper so that it will reach the Returning Officer at her office in Lombard Street, London, E.C., by 3 p.m. on June 25, 1952.

Do not enclose correspondence for Headquarters with your voting paper.

Do not send your voting paper to the Student Nurses' Association.

Voting papers received by the Returning Officer later than 3 p.m. on June 25, 1952, will in no circumstances be accepted.

Professional Responsibility

I am much interested in the series of articles Law Notes for Nurses and Professional Responsibility which are at present appearing in the Nursing Times, and think they are excellent in many ways. I am, however, perturbed by the implications from a paragraph in the Professional Responsibility series in the issue of May 10, on page 464.

In case 'C', the account states 'The Practitioner asked the nurse' to have a certain strength of a drug prepared, and later the author of the article states 'that there may be some criticism as to what was said by the practitioner and what was understood by the nurse'. Surely the criticism is, and the cause of the sad accident obviously was, the fact that the practitioner did not make his request for the drug in a written and signed prescription which the nurse could then have checked by the label on the bottle. Furthermore, where fractions of a drug are concerned, surely it is the practice for safety's sake to insert a nought before the decimal point (e.g. 0.1 per cent.) so that no misunderstanding or misinterpretation of the handwriting can arise. History does not relate whether the practitioner read the label on the bottle before injecting it! I would consider it his responsibility to do this especially if he had given only verbal instructions about the drug. As the articles are written with a view to demonstrating the nursing staff's responsibilities I think this particular example is misleading.

H. M. DOWNTON.

[Clearly it would be preferable to substitute written for oral instructions whenever practicable, but the difficulties which lie in the way of adopting that procedure in such circumstances are only too well known. —Editor.]

Appreciation

I should like to offer my thanks, through the Nursing Times, to the doctors, sisters and nurses of University College Hospital Casualty Department. I was visiting London during Easter week, and had the misfortune to need treatment for a septic thumb. After much hesitation I decided to go to this hospital. I shall never forget the kindness shown to me. The manner of approach to outpatients really is outstanding. They were kind, gentle and thoughtful, in spite of the weekend rush. It seemed to me that not the slightest thing was neglected

Accommodation in Australia

I have just returned from a short visit to Australia, and, while in Sydney, I stayed at Cavell House which is a very comfortable home for trained nurses, and I should like to recommend it to any trained nurses who may be going to Australia.

Cavell House is situated in one of Sydney's residential suburbs and is within easy reach of the centre of the city. The atmosphere is a very friendly and homely one, and the matron is very anxious to entertain British nurses.

I had a very happy time there and met nurses from every part of the Commonwealth thus gaining much knowledge of work and conditions in the various States.

The charge is £4 per week for full board, and the food and accommodation are excellent. Applications should be addressed to The Matron, Cavell House, 102, Prospect Road, Summer Hill, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia.

If any of your readers would like further information about this home or about employment and conditions in Australia, I will be most happy to furnish them.

Church Lane, London, S.W.17.

Thanks

May I through the Nursing Times thank the ex-members of the nursing staff of Leasowe Hospital who contributed to the gift presented to me on leaving.

RETIREMENT

Dr. H. H. MacWilliam

Dr. H. H. MacWilliam, Walton Hospital, Liverpool, will retire from the post of Medical Superintendent of the Hospital on June 30, after thirty-nine years' service there. His many colleagues and friends, and the staff, both past and present, of the hospital will no doubt wish to be associated with a testimonial fund which has been arranged under the aegis of the Hospital Management Committee. It is requested that all contributions be sent, as soon as possible, to Colin A. W. Roberts, O.B.E., Chairman, Hospital Management Committee, and Dr. H. Alstead, Deputy Medical Superintendent.

The National Council of Nurses

Korean Nurses President

The newly elected President of the Korean Nurses' Association is Mrs. On Soon Kim, and the following is an extract from a letter sent to the National Council of Nurses of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

'As new president of the Korean Nurses' Association, I realise it great honour to have this opportunity to write you something about our association. I was recently appointed president by the General Convention of the Korean Nurses' Association, and upon this occasion I decided to do my best in fulfilling my great responsibilities for the development of nursing activities of our association.

Many of our people and many young men from our allied nations of the world have suffered a great loss in life and property in the war still raging in Korea, and we are fully determined to win the final victory for peace and happiness of the world.

From the past experience of the war, we have learned the fact that the activities of preventing diseases and of medical and nursing services are vitally important during the time of war, and we are very grateful for the relief activities of countries through their hospital ships. In this particular line of services, however, we are now facing great handicap and difficulties with the lack of many essential supplies that our doctors and nurses need. Particularly, the shortage of well-trained nurses gives us greater handicap and difficulties in carrying on one of our most important war time duties.

Before the war, we had about 1,600 graduated or well-qualified nurses. Many are missing as a result of war, and now we actually have about 1,000 nurses who have been working hard day and night. Because of the shortage of nurses for the important wartime duties, we now plan to train and educate the girls in such a way that they may become well-qualified nurses in a short period of time. With the complete destruction of all the necessary facilities and supplies for training nurses that the war has caused, and with the poor living conditions of most girls, I am greatly worried over the prospects of our plan to produce as many well trained nurses as possible. Truthfully speaking, we cannot accomplish our purpose of this kind without your spiritual and material support of any kind. And we will be ready for any questions that you may wish to ask us in connection with our future programme of training nurses.

We are hoping that hereafter we may be able to have closer contacts with you, and please, write to me by the address written outside of the envelope. And will you kindly show me the way in which I may make contacts with the International Nurses' Association? I sincerely hope that great success and prosperity may follow your association and that we may be able to have your advice and assistance through your frequent correspondence.'

BROADMOOR RETIREMENT

Dr. J. S. Hopwood, C.B.E., M.B., is retiring in August next after 27 years' service at Broadmoor Institution, during 14 of which he has held the position of Medical Superintendent; his successor will be Dr. S. G. James, M.D., M.R.C.P., D.P.M., Medical Superintendent of Moss Side Hospital, Maghull, near Liverpool.

For Recruitment

A series of shop window displays was recently organised by Hackney Group Hospital Management Committee to encourage recruitment to the National Hospital Service Reserve. Among them was a demonstration (seen here) by nurses of Hackney Hospital of work in an operating theatre. The displays attracted much interest from the public and from the press. A film was taken by Pathé Pictorial, and will appear in an interest film in a few weeks' time. The British Red Cross Society and the St. John Ambulance Brigade helped throughout, and the mayor and mayoress of Hackney supported the campaign by visiting each display.

In Parliament

Trained and Probationer Nurses

Mr. Sorensen (Leyton) asked the Minister of Health, on May 1, how far the supply of trained nurses and probationers in hospitals had improved during the past 12 months; and approximately what was the ratio of patients to nurses in the main London teaching hospitals compared with other hospitals in the London area.

Mr. Crookshank said that during the twelve months ended December 31 last, the latest date for which figures were available, the number of trained nurses and midwives in hospitals in England and Wales increased by 1,873 full-time and 441 part-time, and the number of student nurses by 520. The ratios of patients to nursing and midwifery staff in hospitals in the metropolitan area at December 31 last were: in teaching hospitals 1.24 to 1, and in other hospitals 2.89 to 1.

Scottish Waiting List

Mr. Manuel (Central Ayrshire) asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on May 6 if he would state the number of persons suffering from tuberculosis who were unable to have hospital and sanatorium treatment because of the lack of accommodation and staff. Mr. Stuart said that the number on the waiting list for sanatorium treatment in Scotland at March 31, was 1,723.

Ocular Tuberculosis

Mr. Anthony Greenwood (Rossendale) asked the Minister of Health on May 8 how many cases of ocular tuberculosis were known to his department; and what steps he was taking to acquaint regional boards with the fact that such cases could now be treated in the ocular tuberculosis unit at Swanley, Kent.

Miss Hornsby-Smith said that this condition was not separately notifiable and the number of cases was not known; the present waiting list for the unit was seven. The availability of the unit was generally known through the hospital service, and at the present experimental stage special publicity seemed neither necessary nor desirable. Since it opened on June 7, 1951, 53 patients had been admitted. 20 beds were at present occupied.

New Tuberculosis Drug

Mrs. Mann (Coatbridge and Airdrie) asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on May 6 how far experiments were being made in Scotland with the new tuberculosis drug, isonicotinic acid-hydrazide.

Mr. Stuart replied that in co-operation with the Medical Research Council clinical investigations into the therapeutic value of this drug were being undertaken by the research committee of the Scottish Tuberculosis Society. Trials were planned at six Scottish hospitals prominent in the treatment of tuberculosis, but results could not be expected for some months.

Mrs. Mann asked the Minister if he did not agree that while the British Medical Council had hesitated to make a definite pronouncement about this drug it could be obtained by the ordinary practitioner who might pass it on to his patient irrespective of the possible effects on the patient.

Mr. Stuart said that it was true it could be prescribed by doctors, but it would not be used in hospitals under the Health Service until these trials had been completed.

Mrs. Mann asked whether these doctors were not working under the health service, and was it not rather risky that they should be allowed to prescribe the drug, since it had not been pronounced on by the B.M.C.

Mr. Stuart.—I agree. I should have thought it would have been wiser to await the result of the trials.

MANSFIELD AND KING'S MILL HOSPITALS

A New Cadet Scheme

The Duchess of Portland opens the new school. With her are Councillor J. T. Portas, Miss S. D. Aldridge, Matron, the Duke of Portland and Mr. A. H. Whiteley.

THE Duchess of Portland, when she inaugurated the new cadet scheme at King's Mill Hospital, Sutton-in-Ashfield, said that she felt confident in predicting that the new school would be of immense value in obtaining student nurses for the hospitals of the Mansfield group, where the need was so great. There were 4,000 patients on the waiting lists, and wards were closed because there were not enough nurses.

This cadet scheme has been designed to assist girls of school-leaving age who are interested in a nursing career and who are unable to enter the nursing school until they are 18 years old. It is not unique, as similar schemes are being operated all over the country. However, in this particular case a great effort is being made, firstly to attract the 15-year-olds and secondly to maintain their interest in nursing as their future career—in fact, to 'bridge the gap'. Those responsible for planning the scheme realise the need to provide these girls with a gentle introduction to hospital life and work, to supervise their duties most carefully and to ensure that the subjects of general education are continued in the syllabus of training.

The Mansfield General and King's Mill Hospitals are closely associated, being approved by the General Nursing Council as a combined training school. The nursing school itself, known as the Dorothy Whiteley Training School for Nurses, was the generous gift of Mr. A. H. Whiteley, a local industrialist, and was opened in 1939 as a memorial to his late wife.

Cadets are enrolled in the new scheme on the understanding that they shall on reaching the age of 18 proceed to the Dorothy Whiteley School for preliminary training before entering the wards of the hospitals.

One of the fine pavilion buildings of King's Mill Hospital has been converted for use as the Cadet School. It includes a lecture room, gymnasium, practical room, library, offices and cloakroom. Cadets work seven hours a day, usually from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., for five days a week. One day each week, Thursday, is devoted to classes in general subjects, which include arithmetic, English, general science, and social studies, and to the practical subjects of cookery and dietetics, drawing, modelling, handicrafts and physical education. In addition the cadets attend classes given by the senior sister tutor in hygiene, elementary anatomy and physiology, and, after the first year, in elementary nursing and first aid and infant welfare work. Appropriate films and other visual aids are used in the school and a series of educational visits to neighbouring places of interest are arranged. Textbooks are provided free on loan.

A view of the cadets' large and airy classroom.

The practical room, showing some of the equipment.

Practical duties under supervision will be allocated by a rota which will provide each cadet with a short period in most of the departments of the hospital, excluding the wards. Cadets will not carry out any duties relating to the treatment of patients. An assessment of each cadet's progress is made every six months by the matrons of the two hospitals who direct the scheme. Cadets are paid a salary on the following scale: entry at 15 and over, £104 p.a.; entry at 16 and over, £112 p.a.; entry at 17 and over, £120 p.a. When resident they pay £48 a year for food and accommodation for 48 weeks. Four weeks holiday with pay is granted in each year of service. There is a large and attractive canteen in the hospital which the cadets use for their midday meal. Excellent facilities exist for the playing of games, and there is an active Group Sports Club which they may join upon payment of a weekly subscription. A special uniform dress of pale blue flowered material has been designed for them.

By careful supervision of the cadets and by careful control of their studies and duties, those responsible for the scheme hope to maintain the girls' interest in nursing to prevent them from becoming bored and indifferent towards hospital life and to ensure that they enter the nursing school with enthusiasm to sustain them during their training and future career.

HOSPITAL TREATMENT BY CONTRIBUTION

Those who would prefer private inpatient treatment in hospital or a recognised nursing home if they were seriously ill, would be interested in the Hospital Service Plan which, as the latest brochure explains, enables anyone to provide for these services by paying a very moderate annual contribution. The benefits, which include a very wide range of medical and surgical services, are not restricted to any particular district, but apply to hospitals and recognised nursing homes anywhere in the country. The London Association for Hospital Services which is responsible for this scheme is sponsored by King Edward's Hospital Fund for London, and is managed by a Council whose members are nominated by the British Medical Association and the Royal Colleges of Surgeons, of Physicians, and of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. Those interested may obtain copies of the brochure, The Hospital Service Plan from the London Association for Hospital Services, Tavistock House South, Tavistock Square, London, W.C.1.

Sister Tutor Group in Kent

A meeting of sister tutors was convened on April 19 at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, Rochester, by Miss M. D. Winter (by permission of the acting matron). Miss Gould, chairman of the Sister Tutor Section, addressed the meeting. It was unanimously decided to form a new sister tutor group in the county of Kent. A committee was appointed temporarily until approval and sanction of the group was obtained by the secretary of the Sister Tutor Section.

Will all sister tutors in the county of Kent, who are College members and wish to join the group, kindly communicate with the honorary secretary, Miss G. Jeremiah, Sister Tutor, Gravesend and North Kent Hospital, Gravesend, Kent.

A committee meeting has been arranged at the Preliminary Training School, Devon House, 38, St. Peter's Street, Margate (by kind permission of Miss Gadd) for Saturday, May 24, at 3 p.m. A further general meeting is to be held on July 19, time and place to be arranged.

Scottish Industrial Nurses Group

Scottish Industrial Nurses have now taken another step forward in their process of evolution. Under the auspices of the Royal College of Nursing and with the guidance of the Scottish Council for Health Education, 33 nurses from industry spent the weekend of May 2—4, at Drygrange Hotel, near Melrose, taking as their theme of study Approaches to Health Education. Dr. Margaret Scott, Medical Lecturer for the Council, gave an account of the background of health education that young entrants into industry are likely to have received at school. Dr. A. G. Mearns, Medical Advisor to the Council, and Lecturer in Hygiene at Glasgow University, conducted the remainder of the course himself.

The health of the nation must be a positive attribute and not the negative acceptance of much suffering, as it so often is today. To obtain this ideal, the population must be educated how to live both physically and mentally. The nurse in industry has a unique opportunity for carrying out this education, in her surgery, in her factory and in her local contacts, for example, by private conversation and by public speaking. For this task her hospital training forms the 'corner-stone,' but the art of passing on her knowledge in an intelligible and practical manner needs special study.

With this as an introduction, Dr. Mearns, in four concise and illuminating lectures, succeeded in covering a varied field, including the basic principles of healthy living, such as cleanliness, the technique of 'putting it over' the hazards of particular occupations, the general and social implications of diseases such as tuberculosis, and the problems of women in industry. All the important points were made with a wealth of humour that none of his hearers will forget.

As a forerunner to the course, Miss I. H. Charley, Nursing Consultant, Crusader Insurance Company, and an Honorary Officer of the Royal College of Nursing for many years, showed her film strip on The History of Industrial Medicine. During the weekend, Miss Charley, by her sympathy and understanding, did much to enlighten the nurses, especially the non-College members, on the true nature and value of the work of the Royal College of Nursing.

The comfort of Drygrange Hotel, provided after the war as a Rest Home for nurses by the generosity of South Africa, and the exquisite beauty of the early spring on the river Leader, combined to give all concerned a weekend to be remembered, and what is more, to be acted upon.

NURSES APPEAL COMMITTEE

It was in May 1931 that the College started the weekly appeal for The Nation's Fund for Nurses and we hope to celebrate its 21st birthday this year by receiving more money than we have ever had before. This is vitally important work, and thanks to the kindly human sympathy that has been shown by those who support this fund, steady progress has been made. Last year we reached the height of £2,690. But it needs 'the driving power of constant keenness' if we are to achieve our aim. Please make a great effort and let us have an overwhelming response for 1952.

Branch Activities

Derby

The Derby Branch of the Royal College held a Founders' Day Commemoration Service in the Evans' Memorial Chapel of the Derbyshire Royal Infirmary on Sunday, April 6, at 3 p.m. (See picture, right).

The Rt. Rev. T. Parfitt, Bishop of Madagascar, gave the address. The Rev. G. H. Mallen, Vicar of St. James's, Nr. Derby, and Chaplain to the Infirmary, officiated. Frederick J. Stevenson Esq., was the organist.

The proceeds of the collection are to be given to the College Appeal for Elderly Nurses and The Society for the Propagation of The Gospel in Foreign Parts (for their Medical Missions in Madagascar).

Worthing and South-West Sussex

At a meeting held on April 16 at Worthing Hospital, Mr. H. Eastwood, LL.B., gave a most interesting talk on Local Government. He compared the build-up of the Local Government Acts from 1888 to the present day to that of a patchwork quilt The services such as highways and bridges, parks, pleasure grounds, sea defences, housing, and parts of the Health Services, are controlled by the borough council—and other services, such as Education, Fire Service, Police, and Health Services, under the National Health Act, 1946, are controlled by the county councils whose members are elected from the local boroughs etc. Miss S. B. Bates, chairman, who proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Eastwood, said that although we all were taught in our training something of the Local Government Service it was more interesting to hear how our local rates and taxes were divided.

Glasgow

The Annual Church Service of praise and thanksgiving was held on Sunday, April 27, in the lovely setting of Glasgow Cathedral, which was filled to capacity by nurses and friends. Nurses in uniform, from many hospitals in Glasgow and the West of Scotland, attended.

The sermon preached by the Rev. Harry Thomson, M.A., minister of Gordon Park Church, was inspiring. The Rev. Matthew Houston, B.D., the Rev. Matthew Andrew, M.A., and the Rev. A. J. W. Fulton assisted. The lessons were read by Miss L. G. Duff Grant, R.R.C., and Dr. Nora I. Wattie, D.P.H.

York and Ainsty

The annual general meeting was held on Tuesday, April 22, at the County Hospital. An open meeting followed at 7 p.m. when the chair was taken by the newly-elected President, Mr. W. L. Lawton, C.B.E., J.P. Miss Plucknett, Chairman of the Branches Standing Committee, gave a vivid talk on the work and the necessity of the College and left her audience determined to increase its Branch membership.

Deputy Editor, 'Nursing Times'

We are happy to announce the appointment as Deputy Editor of the Nursing Times of Miss Marion M. West, S.R.N., S.C.M., at present sister-in-charge, Staff Welfare Department, Crusader Insurance Co. Limited, Reigate. Miss West is well known to nurses in this country and in America and Canada, and particularly to industrial nurses through her book A Handbook for Industrial Nurses first published in 1941. She has also contributed to this journal and to the British Journal of Physical Medicine and was tutor to the nurses taking the College industrial nursing correspondence course. Miss West is an active member of the North Western Metropolitan Branch, has been the Branch representative, and was until recently the honorary secretary. She has also been secretary of the Public Health Section within the former London Branch.

Miss West trained at Winnipeg General Hospital, Canada, and took her public health training at Simmons College School of Public Health Nursing, in Boston, Massachusetts. She returned to England to take her midwifery training at the City of London Maternity Hospital. Subsequent experience included the posts of staff nurse, assistant supervisor and supervisor at the Community Health Association, Boston, Massachusetts (district nursing). From 1937 she has been connected with industrial nursing here through the Central Bureau for Insurance Nursing Ltd. and then as Nursing Consultant, Crusader Insurance Co. Ltd. until 1951. Miss West will take up her new post on June 16 and nurses in many parts of the world will join with us in welcoming her to her new sphere.

The National Association of State-enrolled Assistant Nurses

Mrs. E. A. Wellings, S.E.A.N., addressing the conference. From left to right: Alderman Bradbeer, Mrs. Shenfield, Dr. Jean Mackintosh, Mrs. Wellings, Miss I. Sinnett, and Miss E. M. Perry.

THE theme of the professional conference of the National Association of State-enrolled Assistant Nurses held at the Dudley Road Infirmary, Birmingham, on April 23 was Preventive Medicine and its Future. Alderman Bradbeer, declaring the conference open, emphasised the importance of all nurses becoming members of their professional associations. If they failed to work together in this way they could not hope to improve their conditions and remuneration.

Canon Bryan Green, B.D., Rector, St. Martin's-in-the-Bull-Ring, Birmingham Parish Church, in the inaugural address spoke of the qualities which make a good nurse, and of the mental and physical amenities which could enrich a nurse's life.

Four speakers then considered the main theme, with particular reference to the part which the assistant nurse can play. Miss E. M. Perry, S.R.N., sister in charge, Works Surgery, spoke on industrial nursing. Health visiting and district nursing were considered respectively by Miss I. Sinnett, S.R.N., Superintendent of Health Visitors, Birmingham and Mrs. E. A. Wellings, S.E.A.N., and Mrs. B. E. Shenfield, B.A., lecturer in social studies at Birmingham University, spoke on the scope of the assistant nurse in care of old people outside hospital. Dr. Jean Mackintosh, senior assistant Medical Officer of Health for maternity and child welfare in Birmingham, was in the chair.

The ninth annual general meeting of the Association was held at the Dudley Road Infirmary on the afternoon of April 25. The chairman, Miss M. G. Butcher, S.E.A.N., referred in her opening remarks to the resignation of Mrs. C. M. Stocken who had until recently been the general secretary of the Association. She then welcomed Miss P. R. A. Penn who had taken up these duties in February. Considering salaries and conditions of service, the chairman reminded members that the association was represented on the Staff Side of the Nurses and Midwives Functional Whitley Council by virtue of its affiliation to the Royal College of Nursing. A sub-committee of the Council had been set up to consider this matter of salaries and conditions.

The annual report for 1951 was received. Miss Lange, the treasurer, in her report stated that the financial position of the Association had been greatly improved. During the past year the deficit was reduced.

The results of the election of five members of Council were then announced: Mr. S. Livesey, Miss D. North, Miss V. Smith, Mrs. G. W. Stanivan and Mrs. M. A. W. Taylor. Representatives of many branches then gave their reports. Finally the Silver Challenge Cup, awarded each year to the branch which achieves the greatest number of new members in the year, was presented to the representative of the Newcastle branch which had enrolled 24 members.

After the meeting of branch secretaries, Miss M. Neep, S.R.N., principal tutor, Birmingham Accident Hospital, spoke on Prevention and Treatment of Accidents.

This annual general meeting and conference of the Association proved to be most enjoyable and interesting to the representatives attending, and enjoyment was enhanced by a dance held at the Midland Hotel, on the previous evening. This was organised by the Birmingham branch and provided an opportunity for members to meet their friends and fellow members and to get to know each other.

Here and There

ART FOR TUBERCULOUS PATIENTS

The National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis has recently published an attractive leaflet about art therapy for tuberculous patients. The leaflet, illustrated with pictures by patients, emphasises the function of art therapy and describes the work of the Association. Competitions are organised four or five times a year, and it is usual for entries to number over 500. Advice is sent to every patient who enters, prizes are awarded and artists coach patients in sanatoria, and sometimes at home. In a few special cases an art scholarship has been awarded. Books can be borrowed from the NAPT art library. Further information may be obtained from The Secretary, Social Welfare Department, National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, Tavistock House North, London, W.C.1. or 65, Castle Street, Edinburgh, 2, or 28, Bedford Street, Belfast.

MOTHERCRAFT TRAINING SOCIETY NURSES' LEAGUE

The annual general meeting of the Mothercraft Training Society's Nurses' League was held on Saturday, April 19, at Riddell House, St. Thomas' Hospital, by kind permission of the matron, Miss Smyth, who acted as hostess and arranged the tea. Members regretted the absence of Miss Maslen Jones, the retiring President, but welcomed Miss Mabel Liddiard in her place in the chair. This was the first general meeting since the closing of Cromwell House last summer and was well attended. The Mothercraft work is still very much alive both in this country and abroad. In the Far East many members are working as missionaries. In her speech, Miss Liddiard stressed the fact that the Mothercraft Training Society is still in being and the Committee is not dissolved.

Superintendents from the three branch clinics at Brighton, Oxford and Cardiff all gave short reports and testified to the need for their work to continue. Miss Berrill from Brighton gave an encouraging account of how mothers and fathers came long distances to this clinic to obtain help and advice for their families, to buy the Karitane products, layette patterns and the Society's literature. A Californian mother recently called here for a 'schedule' for her baby.

Two Essex nurses who are to spend six months in America—Miss N. Austin and Miss E. Perry. They have won two awards of the Chelmsford and District Scholarships Fund in recognition of devoted services.

GUY'S GUILD OF EX-PATIENTS AND FRIENDS

The Guild of Ex-Patients and Friends of Guy's Hospital has recently issued a progress report of its activities to date. Up to the end of 1950 the remarkable number of 18,000 ex-patients and 1,000 'friends' had been enrolled, and a sum of £2,500 (representing several years' surplus) was handed to the Board of Governors for the following objects: £500 towards the cost of an angio-cardiography apparatus for diagnostic X-Ray used for blue babies and not provided by the Ministry of Health; £2,000 towards financing research into heart conditions in progress at Guy's Hospital. The income for the year 1951 was £3,807 8s. and was devoted to the purchase of numerous gifts and comforts for patients and nursing staff. Not the least useful of the Guild's activities is that of defraying the cost of printing a booklet of very comprehensive information to be handed to all patients admitted to the hospital.

No patient ever refuses Lucozade

We all know how difficult some patients can be . . . particularly elderly people and kiddies . . . they don't like this and hate the taste of that. Give them a glass or two of Lucozade, it is the most pleasant way to administer glucose. Many patients who cannot manage ordinary energy-giving foods thoroughly enjoy Lucozade. It is immediately assimilated, it helps the appetite and places no strain on the digestion. Lucozade is the greatest energy provider in its field and certainly the most pleasant to take.

Lucozade is being used in nursing homes, hospitals and institutions as an improved form of glucose therapy.

swift, safe treatment for wounds, burns and skin infections

ANTIPEOL OINTMENT is now widely used in the treatment of infectious conditions of the skin, mucous membranes and natural cavities.

It consists of sterile vaccine filtrate containing the anti-virus of the micro-organisms prevalent in most skin infections, incorporated in a healing and soothing ointment base of Lanoline, Zinc and Ichthyol.

An application of this ointment results in an almost immediate reduction of inflammation and can be used with safety on the most delicate skin—even that of a newly born infant.

The chief indications for ANTIPEOL Ointment are:

Abscesses, boils, burns, eczema, ulcers, haemorrhoids, impetigo, sycosis, wounds and all inflammatory cutaneous infections.

For ANTIPEOL LIQUID, which is the vaccine filtrate without the ointment base, indications are: Infections of the ear, septic cavities and suppurating wounds.
